THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Saturday, June 1st, the people of this city will vote upon the proposition of uniting the two school districts in Thief River Falls into one independent school district. It is simply a proposition as to whether we will take a step forward, or go along in the same old rut that has been the cause of so much dissatisfaction in school matters, and kept a desirable class of people from locating here. There can be no valid reason advanced why the districts should not be united and the schools of the city placed under one management, thereby not only lessening the cost of maintaining them, but giving a uniform system throughout the city. If the matter is defeated at next Saturday's election, the two districts will never be united, and Thief River Falls will never have a satisfactory school system. It is the duty of every citizen to vote yes on this proposition.

T. B. Walker has lost his combat with the state in the collection of taxes for the year 1900 in Beltrami county. Judge Collins holds that the law restricting the tax levy in this county was unconstitutional. Beltrami county will probably boom for the next few years.

FAITH IN T. R. F.

An Iowa Man Buys Two Hundred Lots Here.

One of the largest deals in city property made in this city for some time was consumated the first of the week, and J. M. Bishop, an attorney from Marshalltown, Iowa, is now the owner of over 200 of the best residence and business lots in the original townsite of Thief River Falls. The deal was engineered by Bagley & Mabey, and the lots were purchased from the Northern Real Estate & Mortgage company and F. H. Kratka. Mr. Bishop purchased the property solely as a speculation, and it will undoubtedly prove a good investment. He is an ardent admirer of the city, and is firmly convinced that it is sure to become the largest place in Northern Minnesota, when the rich agricultural land around here is developed.

Bagley & Mabey will have the control of Mr. Bishop's interests here.

$400 Appropriation.

Senator Grindeland succeeded in getting a $400 appropriation through the legislature for a road across a swamp in the towns of Cedar and Thief Lake, beginning at a point two miles west of Breese postoffice on section line between sections 9 and 16 in Cedar and terminating at the most easterly point on section line between sections 4 and 9 in town of Thief Lake. The money is to be expended for grading, culverts and bridges under the direction of the board of county commissioners. This piece of road has been impassable a large portion of the year, and the people in that part of the county will surely feel under obligations to Mr. Grindeland for his successful efforts in securing this appropriation. It remains to be seen if it will be judiciously expended.—Warren Sheaf.

Since the new law providing for the formation of independent school districts has been made by the last legislature, the rural districts in many portions of the state are agitating the question of uniting to form community schools, and thus improve their conditions educationally. If the county schools of the state can see the great benefit which will come to them by this change, surely it ought to make our cheeks burn with shame if we cannot be up and doing, get out of the old rut, be abreast of the times and reap great benefits which every other city and town of this state and of the United States is enjoying.

Dr. Martin Strand, of Norwegian Swedish parentage, will arrive in this city on June 1st to practice medicine. The Doctor was born in Chicago in 1869, where he has remained ever since. After a thorough preliminary education he entered Rush Medical College in '93 and graduated from this school four years later. In '97 he was appointed assistant to Augustana Hospital, where he remained almost three years, serving under one of the best known surgeons in Chicago. After severing his connection with that hospital he was called to assist the well known surgeon, Dr. Nicholas Senn, with whom he has remained up to date.

In the matter of Edward Gulseth and John Sorenson, co-partners as Sorenson & Gulseth, bankrupts,—In bankruptcy.

Wherefore, they and each of them pray that they may be decreed by the court to have a full discharge from all debts both partnership and individual provable against their estate under said bankrupt acts, except such debts as are excepted by law from such discharge.

While scuffling at the depot at St. Hilaire, Monday, Frank Cletty, one of the Crookston ball players, suffered a serious rupture from which it is hardly probable he will ever fully recover. He now lies in a Crookston hospital in a precarious condition. The young man's home is at Ada.

Louis Hanson, who had been employed as a clerk in this city as a clerk for a number of years, was escorted to the city limits by a crowd of about 500 people and warned not to return. Hanson was accused of being too familiar with the wife of a former sawyer for the Thief River Falls Lumber company.

A large moose passed down one of the streets of the village of Stephen one day last week, evidently deeming life safer amidst the haunts of man than roaming the wilds of Roseau county. He quietly jogged along until the village dogs got after him, when he took to his heels and gave them a lesson in jumping fences and other obstacles.

By a succession of errors in the first two innings of the game, the local ball club was defeated by the Crookston club on the home grounds in this city Monday, the score being 7 to 9. There was a large crowd present to witness the game, and it was the unanimous opinion of all that had our boys "played ball" from the start they would have won easily. Crookston has not any where as near as good a team as Thief River, yet the local club has been defeated by the down river aggregation twice this season.

The rumors which have been circulated about town recently regarding the erection of a $20,000 school building, the lowering of the grade of the East Side school, booming real estate in certain portions of the city, etc., have no foundation whatsoever. The motive of this whole movement has been out and out, solely for for the universal benefit of the whole city and surrounding community. Shall we allow the personal prejudice and suspicion and false report to blind us to the open door of opportunity which this change would afford? Surely not. Every man and woman, boy and girl on both sides of the river are agreed to having three members from each district on the new board of education. What more could be asked Sheriff Sampson the first of the week took Mrs. Fred Hanson, of the town of Sanders to Red Lake Falls for the purpose of having her examined for her sanity before the judge of probate, the complaining witness being her husband, Fred Hanson. Mrs. Hanson lately commenced an action for a divorce upon the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment, and this so enraged Hanson that he is endeavoring to have sent to the insane asylum. A large number of the neighbors went down to testify in Mrs. Hanson's behalf, and she will be acquitted of the charge. Hanson has been enjoined by the court from disposing of any of his personal property.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Left alone, Mr. Chester's reveries were again interrupted by the entrance of a servant with a card, on which was inscribed a name strange to him—Mr. William Grant.

"Is it a gentleman, Edward?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," answered the man.

"Then invite him into this room. I will see him here."

But when, a few moments later, the butler ushered him into the room, his appearance, like the card, was wholly unknown.

He paused on the threshold; then advancing, bowed with the easy grace and self-possession of one familiar with the world.

"I must beg you to pardon my intrusion, Mr. Chester," he said, courteously; "but I had the pleasure of meeting your cousin many years ago, when I was comparatively a boy, and, indeed, traveled with him in company with my father, during several months in Italy. Soon after our little party separated we learned, to our great surprise, that your cousin had married, and returned to this country with his wife. He corresponded with my father for many years—indeed, until the latter's death, which preceded Mr. Markham's five years. He always expressed the most earnest desire that we should see Grey Oaks. At the time of my father's death we were about returning to America; but after that unlooked-for and unhappy obstacle, I was detained in settling up his affairs. I should tell you that he held a diplomatic position under our government for so many years that, now that I am once more in my own native country, I feel a stranger in my own land. However, on at last reaching here, my thoughts naturally reverted to Mr. Markham. I learned that he was dead, and that you, Mr. Chester, were master at Grey Oaks. Will you pardon me that I ventured to redeem my promise, though I could no longer do so to him to whom I made it?"

With a keen glance, Mr. Chester had measured the stranger during this somewhat long, though rapidly-uttered speech.

The man's voice, appearance and manner betokened him high-bred. It was difficult to determine his age, as he wore a short, thick, black beard, cut in English style. His hair was also jetty in hue, and his chin somewhat swarthy; his teeth were very white and even, and, as he wore no mustache, they showed to greater perfection. A scarcely perceptible foreign accent, too, was apparent in his tone.

Ere he had finished speaking Randolph had determined on his course.

If, indeed, this stranger was so familiar with his cousin's early life, he might learn just what information he possessed, and deal with facts accordingly.

Courteously he outstretched his hand.

"Allow me," he said, "not only to welcome you to Grey Oaks, but to claim you as my guest. I am, indeed, master here, Mr. Grant; but the fact gives me no pleasure. You spoke, a moment ago, of my cousin's marriage. Do you know any of the particulars concerning it?"

"None, excepting that we heard it was a highly-romantic affair."

"Romantic, indeed! The truth is, my dear Mr. Grant, it was no marriage at all. The lady in question already had a living husband. This fact transpired only since my cousin's death, but his daughter, on learning the truth—a most beautiful girl, to whom I was engaged to be married—lost her reason. She is under my roof, and, I need not add, has every care; but I fear, poor girl, her recovery is impossible. Pardon my confidence, but your old friendship with my cousin I felt entitled you to it. You are pale, Mr. Grant. Are you ill?"

"A sudden faintness, only," replied the stranger. "I hate to confess such weakness, Mr. Chester, but through my own family runs a vein of insanity, and the thought of associating with any one whose reason is impaired robs me of all my strength. Yet the picture you draw is sad and pitiful, indeed. I can the more truly sympathize with it and you because of my fatal inheritance—an inheritance which explains why I have never married, why I shall never marry."

He sighed deeply and bowed his head. Chester grasped and pressed his hand.

"My dear fellow, you look on it too seriously," he said. "But you will see but little of Miss Markham. She rarely leaves her own apartments. The most singular form her madness takes is her aversion to me, whom she once so fondly loved."

"Indeed! How is that possible?"

"I cannot understand, except that they tell me that it is one of the commonest forms which madness takes."

"I believe it is—I believe it is," assented the other.

And when Chester spoke again he seemed to rouse himself by an effort form the despondency into which the gloomy thought had plunged him.

But at dinner that night—for his consent to a few days' sojourn had finally been obtained, with only natural reluctant distrust at his intrusion—he proved a most brilliant and welcome addition to the little party.

His seat was next Miss Lorrimer, and she it was whom he honored by his most brilliant sallies and most impressive glances.

Beatrice he scarcely addressed—indeed, rarely glanced toward her. Miss Lorrimer's beauty seemed to have blinded him to any other charms.

"Perhaps he may pique Allen into the discovery that Miss Markham's pale loveliness may not dazzle all eyes," she thought.

And even the thought sent the flush to her cheek and added sparkle to her eyes and words.

It was a strange relief to all to have the stranger at the board.

The meal ended, one alone among them all seemed to note that one of their number was missing.

Allen Layton's eyes sought in vain for the face that ever haunted him.

But Beatrice had flown to her own room. The gay voices, the merry laughter, jarred upon every quivering nerve. But it was nearly midnight before the little party separated.

To his new guest Mr. Carter gave the room on the ground floor, which opened from the music room.

"You will allow me to write a few letters in the library before retiring?" asked Mr. Grant.

"Certainly," responded Randolph.

And, with a cordial good-night, went to his own apartment.

But left alone, with all writing materials spread before him, Mr. Grant sat idle.

More and more silent grew the house; one by one the lights were extinguished. But still he sat motionless and lost in thought.

Suddenly he started. A slight and scarcely perceptible noise had reached his ears. Some one was descending the stairs.

His next action was wondrous strange. Lowering the light, he stepped behind one of the heavy curtains, which draped the windows.

Scarcely had he done so than the door already ajar—was pushed open.

He could distinguish, in the dim light, a girl's figure, standing on the threshold. It was she who had been described to him as mad.

Was it the old fear which haunted him which caused his whole frame to tremble at the unexpected apparition?

Cold beads of perspiration stood upon his brow. His heart beat in great throbs, which must, he thought, make themselves heard.

"Papa, guide me!" murmured the girl aloud, in a low, sweet voice—and moved forward as though advancing directly toward him.

CHAPTER XXIV.

At the table, however, she paused, listening intently. Then, as if satisfied that she was indeed, alone, passed on into the music room.

In the dim light he could see her moving to and fro.

She seemed searching for something.

Standing before a tall desk, she passed her hands over its surface, as though seeking some secret hiding place.

Once or twice he started forward, as if about to speak to her, but forced the impulse back.

Suddenly he heard a footfall in the hall. Instinctively, he uttered a low note of warning.

She caught the sound, and looked eagerly about her, but saw nothing.

Just then the library door was again opened, and Allen Layton entered the room. He walked boldly toward the lights and turned them up.

The stranger concealed himself further behind the curtains.

Beatrice stood on the threshold between the two rooms, a look of proud defiance on her lovely face; but when she recognized who was the intruder, it vanished, and a smile took its place.

She wore a long, loose wrapper, made of some creamy, woolen stuff, and her hair was loosely coiled low on the little neck.

Allen's face flushed hotly, as if her beauty ever presented itself to him as a new and growing revelation.

"We are mutually surprised," she said, in a low voice.

"I could not sleep, and came down stairs to find a book," he replied. "I was thinking of you, Miss Markham. Why did you leave us immediately after dinner to-day?"

"You inquire into an insane girl's freak?" she asked.

"Oh, hush—be silent!" he pleaded. Then, coming quickly forward, he caught both her hands in his. "I promised you once to be your friend," he said, in earnest, thrilling tones. Instinctively, he divined the bitter meaning in the sentence she had just addressed to him. His doubts concerning her sanity fled. He felt that she was in bitter trouble, whose nature he could not comprehend, but whatever it might be, he longed only in some way to lighten it. "Have you forgotten that promise?" he continued; "or will you not ask me to redeem it? If I can serve you in any way—in any way—let me do it."

"You did not know that I was mad when you offered to be my friend," she answered.

"I do not believe it now," he said.

"Perhaps not; yet I have read, even in your eyes, the doubt. Why should you not believe it. Does not Randolph Chester assert the fact? What motive could he have for such a dastardly imputation, were it not true? Surely, you do not doubt his honor! Better my sanity than that!"

And she laughed a little, low, mocking laugh that made Layton's blood run cold in his veins.

Why did she talk like this? Why did she seem so unlike the girl who had told him she was homeless and alone in the world? Yet he felt the same longing to make her loneliness less which then had thrilled him—thrilled him now.

"It is you who doubt," he said, "not I. Tell me what you will; leave untold all that you will, only say to me, 'I am not mad, and need your help,' and I will lay my very life at your service."

The curtains moved. The man's face behind them had grown white, and his teeth were set.

"Yes, I doubt you," she replied. "Why should you do this for me? Why should you not prove Randolph Chester's emissary? He tells you I am mad, and you believe him. Indeed, why should you not? What am I in your life that you should take passing notice of my fate?"

"What are you in my life?" he repeated, after her—her coldness torturing him into confession of his own madness. "You are only what you have been from the first moment I lifted you in my arms and looked down on the beauty which ever since has haunted me. You are the one woman in all the world— No, do not start and draw away your hands. I have not forgotten either my honor or my plighted vows! Miss Lorrimer has never believed herself mistress of my heart, never coveted that position!" he added, with a litle harsh, bitter laugh. "She will be mistress of my house, my home, my wealth. She will be none the richer, none the poorer for this brief episode of my life, which has so changed all its coloring; but I shall be the richer, even in my added loneliness, in the new emptiness which existence must henceforth know for me, robbed of your presence—richer for having smelled the fragranceof love's blossom—richer for having tasted the ineffable sweetness of the draughts whose dregs are bitterer than death—richer for having seen the picture whose coloring can never fade, and which alone is framed within my soul! Beatrice, it is neither your fault nor mine that I have loved you. I make it the plea to ask but one boon at your hands—to be of service to you. Will you refuse it now?"

"Colors seen by candlelight do not seem the same by day," interrupted a mocking voice both knew full well. "Do allow Miss Markham to sleep upon your interesting proposal, Allen. An interview in the morning, though less romantic, might possess greater propriety! Ah, here is the book of which I came in search. Unexpectedly, I opened on the pages of another more interesting romance. Singular that we should all appear restless to-night! Hereafter I promise to take my stray volume with me on my first retiring. It is embarrassing to play witness or eavesdropper. Good-night!"

"Stop! One moment, Edith!" exclaimed Layton. "our words hold an implication which, in justice to Miss Markham, cannot pass. You speak as though this interview had been planned. It was as wholly unexpected as is ours now, but since you have heard all that I have said, I must leave my fate in your hands, Edith."

With a low inclination of the head, Beatrice slowly walked past them, and ascended the stairs leading to her room.

Miss Lorrimer watched her with curling lip and flashing eye, until a bend in the staircase hid her from view.

"You mean your freedom is mine to return to you, Allen Layton?" she said, slowly. "You mean that, having overheard all that you told this nameless heroine, my dignity will not permit me to hold you to your vows? You mean that knowing the casket you offer me is wholly empty, I should return it to you? Why? Tell me why! According to your own words, this knowledge is not new to me. According to your own conviction, I wish no place or part in your heart. According to your belief, love has never entered into the terms of our contract. Then, I hold you to it. Ay, as relentlessly as ever Shylock did. If it is your name, your wealth, your house I covet, give them to me. Our engagement remains unbroken, Mr. Layton, unless you cancel the bonds between us. Good-night!"

She flitted noiselessly from the room; but once within the four walls of her apartment, she let the mask of calmness fall.

Up and down the floor she paced, like a fierce lioness pent within its cage.

"I might have won him—I might have won him, but for her!" she murmured. "Why did I come here? What madness brought me? O, God, it is I who will go mad! His home, his wealth, his name I covet? This he believes; and I would give all—all for one little word of love, one glance, one kiss to tell me passion had awakened his soul. She—she can win it all! To me he throws the dry crust, and he lieves it satisfies my hunger. His wife! Vain title, empty name! I would rather be his slave, his servant, and know myself necessary to one hour of his existence, one minute of his happiness, than live a lifetime by his side with starvation slowly consuming my soul. Allen, are you blind? Can you not see? Oh, God, show me some way in which, through which she, not he nor, I, may be the victim of my own love, passion and hate!"

CHAPTER XXV.

At an early hour Tyrrell was admitted to his master in the library. It was half an hour before the interview between them ended.

"Remember, there is no mistake at this time," were Chester's last injunctions, as the man turned to take his leave. "He is not to be out of your sight a minute, and if he speaks of leaving, detain him even by force. Watch carefully if he tries to obtain an interview with Miss Beatrice, and always prevent it, without seeming to do so. This is all; but to do it well requires all the wit you possess—no great quantity—and see to it that you don't muddle that little with liquor, or— But what's the use of threats? You know all he 'or' means. Now, be off with you!"

"Ah, Mr. Grant, I did not know that you had risen already. Good morning! I was just giving some orders to a rascally servant who is not worth his wages, but is endeared to me through association with my cousin."

"Yes; I overheard your last words to him. Pardon my unintentional eavesdropping. The fact is, I was restless last night, and this morning's beauty tempted me to an early walk. What a lovely, beautiful place you have here, Mr. Chester! I no longer wonder at Mr. Markham's anxiety that I should see it. How happy I should have been to have been able to accept his cordially-proffered hospitality! This sad story about his daughter, too, has impressed me strongly. Indeed, to that I think I may attribute my restless night. By the way, Mr. Chester, I noticed an old man working in your grounds. Is he, too, one of the old retainers of the family?"

"No. I may have more to tell you concerning him. At present, let us discuss breakfast."

"And he slipped his hand through Mr. Grant's arm.

The latter involuntarily shivered and drew back.

"What is it?" asked Mr. Chester, in surprise, a slight frown gathering on his brow, since the gesture was so singularly like that of instinctive aversion.

Mr. Grant laughed lightly.

"Your pardon," he said; "but a year ago I was so unfortunate as to break my arm. Though I have fully recovered its use, it remains very sensitive, and any touch is liable to cause me acute pain."

Mr. Chester's brow cleared, and together the men entered the breakfast room.

The rest of the party had already assembled, and the meal shared the brilliancy which Mr. Grant had lent the dinner of the evening previous.

"Three days only to Christmas!" he explained. "Since Mr. Chester insists upon my acceptance of his hospitality, I propose that we all resolve ourselves into a party of children and have an old-fashioned Christmas tree. I am obliged to go to the city to-day, and will undertake any commissions. The tree itself we will ask Mr. Chester's gardener to provide us with."

"Quite a charming idea, they all agreed.

All began an active preparation of lists. All save Beatrice.

When Mr. Grant had received those from the rest of the party he approached her, where she stood gazing out of the window.

"You have no commissions for me," Miss Markham?" he asked.

"None!" she answered. "There is no season of the year so full of mockery to me as this. And yet, one year ago—only one little year ago—I was so happy!"

The latter sentence she spoke to herself, rather than to him.

"Poor child!" he murmured.

She turned. Something in his tone caused her heart to beat madly, her pulses to thrill. The color flushed her cheek—a new light leaped into her eye, but she found herself looking into a cold, impassive face—a face bronzed and swarthy in hue—a face without one familiar sign or trace. Was she going mad that the silence spoke to her, and in every stranger's voice she fancied she could detect some familiar ring?

But one other had caught the light and gladness that short-lived hope had sent into her face. Miss Lorrimer saw and wondered. What could it mean?

A few minutes later the carriage drove up which was to take Mr. Grant to the depot.

"I would accompany you," said his host, as he walked with him to the door, "but important business detains me here to-day. I wish, Mr. Grant, I might ask a little service at your hands, aside from the regular commissions you have kindly volunteered to perform. I wish two detective officers to come down by the evening train, in the character of two stablemen. Tyrrell will assign them rooms in the gardener's house, and they shall be thoroughly comfortable, for I want the best men. Don't let this alarm you; but the fact is, I have discovered some dishonesty among my servants, and I with to ferret it out."

"I will attend to it with pleasure," responded Mr. Grant.

But he looked serious to severity as he descended the steps to the carriage.

The lodge gates stood open, but beside them was standing an old man.

He respectfully uncovered his head as the carriage passed.

How it happened was not easily explained, but most awkwardly, in leaning out of the window, probably to look back over the sweep of the drive, Mr. Grant's fur cap was blown off by a sudden gust of wind from his head.

The old man picked it up and ran as fast as his feeble strength would permit after the carriage, which Grant had ordered to stop.

As he took the hat he slipped some coin into the old, trembling hand.

"Thank ye, sir!" muttered the recipient, and tottered off.

His further actions, however, were very strange. Not once did his fingers unclasp which held his gift. Not once did he glance within to estimate its value. Very tightly he held it as he made his way back to the lodge, and, entering, carefully closed the door behind him.

Then he cast a cautious, wary glance about, to make sure that he was alone, and then unclasped his hand.

True, within it lay a coin; but about the coin was wrapped a paper, and on the paper were written characters.

It almost seemed as if the loss of the hat had been premeditated for the purpose of offering the gift.

Conspicuously protruding from the pocket of his ragged coat were a pair of spectacles. But he made no use of them, as from under his shaggy brows, his quick sight glanced downward:

"Take care! You are suspected!"

He chuckled as he read, then thrust the tell-tale slip into the fire.

As it flamed up Tyrrel opened the door and entered.

"Can ye find nothing to do outside, that ye sit huggin' the fire?" he asked. "There's a pile of wood there I'd like ye to bring in. For my part, I'm going to take a little comfort."

And he reached for a bottle of spirits from a shelf near at hand.

"I'd not mind a drop to warm my own bones," said the old man.

"Your work'll warm 'em. Go to it!" commanded the ex-groom.

"It does me good to set him at it!" he muttered to himself, as, obediently, the old man left the room. "I owe him a grudge; but I wish as Miss Beatrice didn't care for him. Gad!—what eyes she has! They look into a fellow's soul!—as if such a man as myself had a soul! Well, here's to it and her!" and he took a long pull at the bottle. "I'd like to tell her the truth. I'd like to see how she'd look; I'd like to see his head brought low; but it's true he's got the noose about mine. I don't dare—I don't dare!" and again the contents of the bottle perceptibly diminished. "Ah, there she is now!" he added, as he saw his young mistress approaching the old man at his work.

The liquor had mounted to his brain, but he remembered Chester's commands, and, catching up his hat, and tying the muffler at his throat, he half-staggered toward them.

Beatrice looked indignantly at his approach.

'Carrying wood is too hard for the old man!' she said, imperatively. "Can you not find something easier for him to do?"

"Ye'd like something aisy for him, miss," answered Tyrrell, with a half-wink. "It's great interest that ye take in him, but it's not very hard to understand."

Bewildered and indignant, at the familiarity both of look and tone, Beatrice gave the servant a glance which partially sobered him.

"Beg pardon, miss!" he muttered, "Only I'll take better care of him for your sake."

(To Be Continued.)

Coincidental Deaths.

Canon Scott Moncrieff's death within a quarter of an hour of his wife's—from totally different causes—recalls that of the Bishop of Clonmel at Waterloo Road, in Dublin a few years ago. His wife being suddenly taken ill at midnight, he rushed into the street in search of a doctor, was seized with heart failure and both died almost simultaneously. Similar cases with twins have been mysteriously common. On January fifth of last year twins George and John Smith, of Peckham, died of pneumonia on the same day. Still later two children, both named Ada Deller, but total strangers, being of the same age and living close together at Lambeth, were found dead in bed on the same date.—London Chronicle.

Anecdotal.

"I find myself too poor," faltered Sir Walter Raleigh, "to keep a servant!"

"Well?" rejoined the good Queen Bess, with froideur, for she chanced to be crosser than two sticks that day.

"Your majesty," quoth the courtier, "if I have no servant, who, pray, is to throw an ewer of water over me as I enjoy my pipe, exclaiming: 'Where there is smoke there is fire?'"

Even the Tudor could not find it in her heart to stand in the way of Sir Walter's having an anecdotal side to his character, accordingly, albeit, it was with no very good grace, she drew an order upon the royal exchequer.—Detroit Journal.

How Corpses Travel at Sea.

In touching on this gruesome subject of the disposition and transportation of bodies, we wonder how many of our readers who may chance to see a great box hoisted on a trans-Atlantic steamer, labeled, "Specimen of Natural History," are aware that it contains a human body. Yet such is the fact—and in such a manner does the entry appear on the ship's manifest. Sailors have long abandoned the superstition against sailing with such an "item" among the cargo; but passengers—most of them pleasure-seekers—are always bathed in gloom at such a reminder that man is mortal. Hence the delicate euphimism.

TO GAIN TERRITORY

It Was Found Necessary To Move a River.

Kingston, Jamaica, April 4.

The following statement of the causes leading up to the recently developed boundary trouble between the republics of Hayti and Santo Domingo and of the present condition of affairs is furnished by persons just returned from the island: What is known as the Dominican republic, or the republic of Santo Domingo, was once a province of the republic of Hayti. In 1844 the internal troubles and state of anarchy which then prevailed (as a result of the revolution which overthrew the government of President Boyer, after twenty-five years in office) facilitated and was the cause of the secession of the eastern portion of the island, which then proclaimed its independence. The existence of the new republic was recognized by the Haytien government in 1874. The question of the delimitation of the frontiers arose naturally from the fact that the territory of the Dominican republic is not, and never has been, defined. The incident that has recently occurred at Phitobert, on the northern frontier, and which greatly endangers the friendly relations of the sister republics, is considered by the Haytiens to be, premeditated provocation on the part of the Dominicans. The Haytien posts established in that district to put down smuggling and brigandage from over the border have had to defend themselves against the repeated attacks. By mutual consent the river Massacre, which divides the Dominican province of Dajabon (or Laxavon) from Haytien territory has for a long time been provisionally accepted by this government as the natural boundary of the two states. All the country on the right bank of the river was acknowledged to belong to Santo Domingo, while the country on the left bank was regarded by both governments as Haytien territory.

And hereby hangs a funny and interesting tale. The Dominicans a year or two ago conceived a brilliant idea. Knowing that nature sometimes makes rivers in the tropics change their courses it occurred to some people residing on the right bank of the stream that they might add considerably to Dominican territory if they could manage to effect a deviation in the bed of the Massacre. And no sooner thought than attempted. Huge boulders and trunks of trees were repeatedly rolled into the river. This, the Haytiens say, with the knowledge and connivance of the Dominican government. But up to the date of the commencement of the present troubles all such attempts to improve upon nature proved unavailing. For the Haytiens on the left bank discovered the little scheme, and time after time removed the obstacles in the river before damage was done. However, within a couple of weeks ago, a remarkable thing happened. The Haytien soldiers at Phitobert, situated on Haytien territory on the left bank of the Massacre, retired to rest one night. When they awoke next morning they looked in vain for the river. The bed over which the water had previously flowed was dry. Investigations followed, and it was found that the river was flowing over a new channel some miles to the west. Of course the Dominicans discovered, not that the river had changed its bed in the course of a night, but that the Haytien soldiers had transferred some substantial buildings some miles into the interior of San Domingo in the space of a single setting and rising of the sun. The Dominican representatives appeared immediately on what was Haytien territory the day before and called upon the Haytien officer to remove his position to the other side of the river. The Dominican officer who made the demand expressed the indignation of his government at the contemptible action of the Haytiens. The Haytiens, however, refused to withdraw their post, calling instead upon the Dominicans to restore the river to its original bed. Then the trouble commenced. There was a clash of arms. The Haytiens had the upper hand, and so the Dominicans agreed to have the whole matter decided by arbitration. Meantime, however, the Dominicans are quietly preparing for war, and there is a strong feeling in Hayti that there will be a clash of arms before the question of arbitration is settled. The Haytien troops along the frontier have been reinforced and are now quietly awaiting the coming of the Dominicans to force them back across the river.—Philadelphia Times.

Oil Versus Coal

Product of the Texas Field May Come Into Use for Fuel.

Ex-Gov. Hogg of Texas, believes that the discovery of oil in such bountiful quantity in that commonwealth will revolutionize the fuel question of the whole world. He says that the manufacturers of this country and Europe have not yet come to a sense of a realization of what the wonderful oil discovery and development in the Beaumont fields means to them. The problem that now confronts the oil producers of the new district is what shall they do with the oil.

Seven gushers already in the Beaumont field is a record which is adding daily interest in the development in the new oil region. It seems to be generally recognized that the great value of the oil is its quality as a fuel, placed by natured where it is capable of doing he most good to the greatest number at the least cost of production.

The special advantages which Beaumont oil has over any other oil in the world is in the fact that it can be produced and marketed at a minimum cost. Being produced within eighteen miles of a seaport, it can be piped into tank steamers at a cost so small as to be almost incalculable, and it can be delivered at the seaports of the United States, Mexico, the West Indies, South America and Europe at a cost so low that no other fuel can be used in competition for steam purposes.

Fuel oil from wells in the Beaumont field can be piped into the seaboard at Port Arthur and run into tank steamers at a total cost of production and transportaion no exceeding ten cents a barrel, and as three and one-half barrels of oil are equal to one ton of coal for steam purposes, this is equal to the delivery of coal at the seaboard at a cost of thirty-five cents a ton.

The location is specially advantageous for shipment to Mexico and the West Indies, which are the largest importers of American coal, receiving nearly eighty per cent of all the coal that is exported, excepting that which goes to Canada. In considering the export feature of fuel oil and the advantageous location of the Beaumont field, the growing importance of New Orleans and Galveston as seaports should not be overlooked. These ports now stand respectively fourth and fifth in the value of their exports, which in each case amount to more than double that of San Francisco, and are only exceeded by New York, Boston and Baltimore.

CUBA IS HAPPY

Her People Want Uncle Sam's Protection to Gain Riches.

Gen. Wood, military governor of Cuba, is in Washington. He says everything is harmonious in the island and it is prospering. What is wanted is the repeal or reduction of the sugar tax now in force by the United States. With the former granted Cuba would embark on a career of unprecedented prosperity.

As public affairs go they are in such a condition that they could be turned over to the Cubans on forty-eight hours' notice. Every position not held by a Cuban has one just below it held by a Cuban who thoroughly understands his American superior's duties.

The tranquil condition of Cuba can best be understood by the fact that Gen. Wood's home is only protected by a single Cuban guard, and one could journey all over the island without molestation as well as in the United States. Highway robberies are not unknown in Arizona or New Mexico, and perhaps on a tour through twenty towns of Cuba they may occur, but they are a rarity.

In the Pinar del Rio and Puerto Principe provinces no troops are stationed, and but 4,200 throughout the entire island. The people appreciate the change of the last ten years. Two years ago last January we were issuing 200,000 rations, today not any, except in the hospitals. There are 180,000 children enrolled for the public schools when at that time there were but few. Of these children 132,000 attend school, of which there are 3,300, and we have 3,800 teachers. The streets of Havana and other cities are clean, and there has been no case of yellow fever in the former city since March 5.

Fine and Costly Leather.

The finest and most costly leather that is used in this country for manufacturing purposes is known in the trade as piano leather. This leather, so called because it is exclusively employed for covering piano hammers, is in its raw state an American product, being the skin of the gray deer, which are found only in the vicinity of the great Northern and Western lakes. But as American tanners have not acquired the art of properly curing the skins, they have to be shipped to Thuringia, Germany, to be tanned before they can be used by the manufacturers of piano actions. The German tanners have agents in the West, who collect the deerskins from the Indians and half-breed hunters. When the skins are returned to the United States as finished piano leather they cost the piano manufacturers from $15 to $20 per pound. The world's supply of this valuable and very necessary material is monopolized by a family of tanners who own and operate six or seven establishments in Germany, the largest of which are located at Thuringia.—Washington Star.

She is a firm, just ruler, however, and holds the reins of government with better judgment than most of the men who govern adjoining states.

OUR BISCUITS IN HAVANA.

Two Things That Impressed a Visitor—The Other Was the Strength of the Coffee.

A Philadelphian who has just returned from Cuba was impressed by two things during his stay in Havana—the strength of the coffee that is served and the vast quantities of soda biscuits of American manufacture consumed by the natives. "It took me some time to get accustomed to the coffee," he said. "At first I used to water it, but gradu*ally I fell into the Cubans' way of* drinking it, and learned to like the strong, aromatic flavor. Our own coffee now tastes weak and insipid to me. The poorer classes of Cuba will make a meal from coffee and soda biscuits. I learned that more of those biscuits are sold in Havana than in any of even the largest American cities. Key West, although comparatively a small community, comes next in the consumption of biscuits."—Chicago Journal.

Verdict Meant Death.

Aldrich, Mo., May 27th.—Four of the best doctors in the vicinity have been in attendance on Mrs. Mollie Moore of this place, who has been suffering from a severe case of nervousness and kidney disease. Each of them told her that she would die.

Hearing of Dodd's Kidney Pills, she began to use them, and instantly noticed a change for the better. Her improvement has been continuous since then. She says that the disease first manifested itself by the appearance of dark spots floating before her eyes. Her nerves were so bad that many times she would collapse completely, and she would fall down as if shot.

The fact that Dodd's Kidney Pills saved her after four doctors had given her up, has caused no end of talk in this neighborhood, and all are loud in their praises of this new remedy—Dodd's Kidney Pills—which is curing so many hitherto incurable cases, in this state and elsewhere.

WESTERN CANADA'S DECEMBER WEATHER

Equal to That of May in Minnesota.

To the Editor:—Thomas Regan and C. Collins of Eden Valley, Minnesota, went out to Western Canada last December as delegates to look over the grazing and grain lands that are being offered at such low prices and reasonable terms. This is what they say:

"We arrived in Calgary about the 20th of December and although we had left winter in Minnesota and Manitoba, we were surprised to find beautiful warm weather at this point, quite equal to what we have in May in Minnesota. There was no snow nor trace of winter to be seen, and the climate was really splendid. Horses, cattle and sheep were running out, in prime condition, with plenty of feed on the prairie, and really better than that of ours stabled in the south. We are impressed with this country as one of the finest mixed farming countries we have ever seen. The immense tracts of fertile lands well sheltered and abundantly watered leave nothing to be desired.

"Leaving Alberta we returned east and visited the Yorkton district in Assiniboia. We drove out about ten miles at this point and were highly pleased with the splendid samples of grain we were able to see—wheat yielding 25 bushels, oats 60 bushels. Roots were also good specimens. From what we have seen, we have decided to throw in our lot with the Yorktoners—satisfied that this part of the country will furnish good opportunities for anyone anxious to make the best of a really good country."

"Any agent of the Canadian government, whose advertisement appears elsewhere in the columns of your paper will give you full particulars of the new districts being opened out this year in Assiniboia and Saskatchewan.

Yours truly, Old Reader.

"I followed Mrs. Pinkham's Advice and Now I am Well."

A woman is sick—some disease peculiar to her sex is fast developing in her system. She goes to her family physician and tells him a story, but not the whole story.
She holds back something, loses her head, becomes agitated, forgets what she wants to say, and finally conceals what she ought to have told, and this completely mystifies the doctor.
Is it a wonder, therefore, that the doctor fails to cure the disease? Still we cannot blame the woman, for it is very embarrassing to detail some of the symptoms of her suffering, even to her family physician. This is the reason why hundreds of thousands of women are now in correspondence with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. To her they can give every symptom, so that when she is ready to advise them she is in possession of more facts from her correspondence with the patient than the physician can possibly obtain through a personal interview.
Following we publish a letter from a woman showing the result of a correspondence with Mrs. Pinkham. All such letters are considered absolutely confidential by Mrs. Pinkham, and are never published in any way or manner without the consent in writing of the patient; but hundreds of women are so grateful for the health which Mrs. Pinkham and her medicine have been able to restore to them that they not only consent to publishing their letters, but write asking that this be done in order that other women who suffer may be benefited by their experience.
Mrs. Ella Rice, Chelsea, Wis., writes:
"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For two years I was troubled with falling and inflammation of the womb. I suffered very much with bearing-down pains, headache, backache, and was not able to do anything. What I endured no one knows but those who have suffered as I did. I could hardly drag myself across the floor. I doctored with the physicians of this town for three months and grew worse instead of better. My husband and friends wished me to write to you, but I had no faith in patent medicines. At last I became so bad that I concluded to ask your advice. I received an answer at once advising me to take your Vegetable Compound, and I did so. Before I had taken two bottles I felt better, and after I had taken five bottles there was no happier woman on earth, for I was well again. I know that your Vegetable Compound cured me, and I wish and advise every woman who suffers as I did to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Believe me always grateful for the recovery of my health."—MRS. ELLA RICE, Chelsea, Wis.

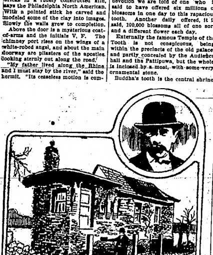
SCHUYLKILL HERMIT'S HOME.

Valentine Fulbas, the hermit of the Schuylkill, finished the latest addition to his house the other day and to celebrate the event sat in his shirt sleeves on a stump in front of his doorstep and viewed his handiwork with a smile of satisfaction.

His house is the delight of his life. It stands on a piece of Reading railway property near the river and opposite Shawmont. For three years he has been working upon it. From an island above he brought boatload after boatload of river clay and baked it into bricks in a rudely constructed kiln, says the Philadelphia North American. With a pointed stick he carved and modeled some of the clay into images. Slowly the walls grew to completion.

Above the door is a mysterious coat-of-arms and the initials V. F. The chimney port rises on the wings of a white-robed angel, and about the main doorway are pilasters of the apostles looking sternly out along the road.

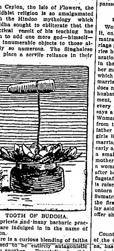
"My father lived along the Rhine and I must stay by the river," said the hermit. "Its ceaseless motion is company to me. As for my house, it is finished, and I will rest. I will live here always, for the railroad said I could have the ground until I die. As for my images, they are my own. I know what they mean, but you never will, for I will not tell you. Some persons call me a hermit. It kept me occupied —it kept me from thinking."



HERMIT FULBAS AND HIS HOUSE.

BUDDHA'S TOOTH AN OBJECT OF WORSHIP

In Ceylon, the Isle of Flowers, the Buddhist religion is so amalgamated with the Hindoo mythology which Buddha sought to obliterate that the practical result of his teaching has been to add one more god—himself—and innumerable objects to those already so numerous. The Singhalese still place a servile reliance in their devil-priests and many barbaric practices are indulged in in the name of religion.



TOOTH OF BUDDHA.

There is a curious blending of faiths supposed to be entirely antagonistic one to another. Especially is this brought out at the greatest annual festivity of Kandy, assumed to be a great Buddhist ceremony, whereas it is really all in honor of several Hindoo gods and goddesses, the Buddhist's part being simply the nominal loan of a relic —in truth, the loan of an empty shrine. But seeing that the relic in question claims to be no less a treasure than that of a veritable tooth of Guatama Buddha, and is the object of unbounded reverence to all the many millions (somewhere about 400,000,000) who worship him, and a relic for the possession of which bloody wars have been fought, and incredible sums of money offered, it is perhaps not to be wondered at the priests took good care to lock it up securely before allowing its shrine to join in the procession of relics of the Hindoo gods.

It is said that Kandy, where the sacred tooth is preserved, owes its very existence as the mountain capital to the fact of this precious bit of bone having been taken there for safety in the sixteenth century. The Dalada Maligwa, the Temple of the Tooth, has been year by year enriched by the offerings of the countless throng of pilgrims who do homage to the relic by offering gifts of gold and silver ornaments, coins, jewels, vestments for the priests, fruit and flowers. The latter are at all times a graceful feature of this worship, for as none care to appear empty-handed before the altar of Buddha, there are few in all the throng of worshipers who have not some flowers to offer. Among the legendary acts of devotion we are told of one who is said to have offered six millions of blossoms in one day to this rapacious tooth. Another daily offered, it is said, 100,000 blossoms all of one sort and a different flower each day.

Externally the famous Temple of the Tooth is not conspicuous, being within the precincts of the old palace, and partly concealed by the Audience hall and the Pattipuwa, but the whole is inclosed by a moat, with some very ornamental stone.

Buddha's tooth is the central shrine of the great altar in the temple. Upon the altar stands an octagonal cupola of solid silver and gold, supported by slender pillars. In front of this are three miniature crystal dagobas or bell-shaped relic shrines, each resting on a square base, and two golden candlesticks with lighted candles. In the small dagobas on either side are displayed priceless jeweled objects—royal gifts. Within the central shrine, which is of the purest crystal, lays a large golden lotus blossom, from the heart of which, upheld by a twist of gold wire, is upraised the worshipful piece of yellow ivory, which to the unquestioning eye of faith actually passes for a human tooth.

Marriage Customs in Sumatra.

Women do not have a bad time of it, on the whole, in the island of Sumatra. The husband settles a marriage portion on his wife when he marries her. He is a liberty to get a separation from her if he wishes it, but in that case he is bound to give her her marriage portion and any property which she may have brought into the marriage contract untouched. The wife does not live in the same house as her husband, but has a separate establishment, at which her husband visits her every evening. If there are children, says a writer in the March number of Womanhood, the boys are taken away from their mother, and live with the father from their fourth birthday. The girls live with their mother till their marriage, which takes place at a very early age. When the daughters marry, a small house is built adjoining the mother's house, in which they live. If a woman is left a widow, immediately after her husband's death she plants a flagstaff at her door, upon which a flag is raised. So long as the flag remains untorn by the wind, the etiquette of Sumatra forbids her to marry, but at the first rent, however tiny, she can lay aside her weeds and accept the first offer she has.

The Real Waldersee.

Count Waldersee, the representative of the German aggressiveness in China, has had to bear the blame of so much brutality credited to German soldiers, and so much warfare against unresisting Chinese, that his name promises to be used by the judicious to scare children into good behavior. For how much of what we have disapproved in German doings in China he is really responsible it is not possible to say, but until he went to China he was regarded as one of the most civil and respectable persons in Europe. Gen. Wilson, who saw him in China, was most agreeably impressed by him, and deprecated the idea that he had countenanced atrocities. His wife, as is well known, is an American woman, and Americans who have visited her at home have brought back admiring reports of the count, who is pictured as a courteous and agreeable gentleman, who, after a fashion that is less prevalent in this country than it once was, regularly reads prayers every morning before his assembled household.—Harper's Weekly.

TOAD THE FARMER'S FRIEND.

Estimate That Each Toad Is Worth $20 a Year.

From the earliest times the toad has been associated with many creations of the imagination. He, however, has a true value that deserves recognition and appreciation by the farmer. The shrill cry of the toad in the pond is heard in early spring. The eggs are hatched in the water, from which the young tadpoles must get their living until they don the leaping-boots of the toad. About July 1 the fields and gardens are covered with myriads of young toads which may be seen on damp, cloudy days or in the cool of the evening, leaping about in quest of food. It has been estimated with some degree of accuracy that the toad lives from ten to fifteen years, but there is some symptom of a doubt as to the age of toads found buried in solid stone or trees. The toad cannot bear the noon-day sun and it is really a nocturnal creature. It has regular haunts and travels in familiar paths when in quest of food. It feeds continuously throughout the night, consuming in twenty-four hours an amount of food equal in bulk to about four times its stomach's capacity. An examination of a large number of stomachs showed that 98 per cent of the toad's food consists of worms, insects, etc.; and about 80 per cent of this amount consisted of insects directly injurious to field crops and garden produce. It has been estimated that a single toad eats in one year enough insects, which, if they had lived, might have damaged crops to the amount of $20. While the toad does good work for the farmer, it is to the greenhouse man and to the gardener that he renders his greatest service. If food is abundantly provided the toad may be induced to leave its favored haunts and take up its abode in the garden or greenhouse. The chief enemy of the toad is the small boy who destroys great numbers of them every year. The toad is a great friend of the farmer and gardener, and as such should have their hearty protection.—W. B. Anderson in Indianapolis News.

VALUE OF THE FOOT BATH.

Nothing Is More Conducive to Health Than Bathing.

Doctors who are not too anxious for fees unite in declaring that the best way to break up a cold, which certainly disfigures the face of beauty as well as a valuable adjunct in the removal of facial eruptions, the nightly foot-bath is invaluable. The largest sweat glands of the body are located in the palms, armpits and soles of the feet. It is of primary importance that these multitudinous outlets should be unclogged. Where facial eruption exists and the whole attention is devoted toward the care of the face, every pore is active and open to afford the escape of clogging impurities. This is all wrong. The feet should be made the gateway for the escape of effete deposits. The temperature of the foot bath should range from 105 and 110 degrees, or as hot as can be endured with comfort. Should there exist chronic, profuse and offensive perspiration add a lump of washing soda to neutralize the acid exudation. The feet should be rubbed briskly to draw the blood down to the extremities. Cool the water before withdrawing the feet, so that they may not become unduly tender. Rub long and thoroughly with a soft towel. Good pedal circulation is a foe to corns and chilblains. Frequent warm foot-baths prevent callouses and make walking a pleasure. For beauty and complexion take extraordinary care of the feet.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Blue Jay.

The blue jay is quite common throughout the year, its number being somewhat decreased during the winter season. During nesting time the jay is forced to be an industrious hunter of insects. After family cares are over he roams the country, making himself conspicuous in many ways. This bird has been accused of robbing other birds' nests and killing their young. Corn is the favorite grain of the blue jay, and an examination of a number of stomachs during different months revealed the fact that they ate most of their corn during the first five months of the year, gleaning it from the waste of the field, or perchance impudently taking a few grains from a crack in the crib. Their chief food during the fall is acorns and other mast. The results of these stomach examinations show that the jay eats many injurious insects, takes but little corn, except waste grain; that its robbing habits have been greatly exaggerated, that it does little harm to agriculture and a great deal of good.—W. B. Anderson, in Indianapolis News.

Pithy Funeral Service.

Representative J. M. Allen of Mississippi once heard a pithy funeral service delivered by a colored preacher over a dead negro. The negro had been fond of attending gay parties, where he whistled and danced, and these practices the preacher did not approve, so he said: "My brethren and sisters, we are here to pay our last sad respects to our departed brother. Some say he was a good man, and some say he was a bad man. Where he has gone to we can't tell, but in our grief we has one consolation, and that is—that he is dead!"

Stenches to Compel Surrenders.

During the sieges of medieval times it was very common for the beleaguers to throw from their catapults and other military engines, dead bodies of dogs, swine, together with pieces of horseflesh and similar carrion into the city or castle besieged, in order that the defenders might, by the stench of this putridity, be forced to a surrender.

TO VISIT THE U. S.

SUCH IS SAID TO BE THE DESIRE OF AGUINALDO.

Former Filipino Chief Credited With a Desire to Study the Language and Institutions of the Country That He May Be Better Fitted to Assist His Countrymen Under American Policy of Control—Filipino Commission Has a Plan of Government That They Believe Will Be Satisfactory.

Washington, May 26.—There was a report around the war department yesterday that Aguinaldo desires to visit the United States, and that he has made a request for this privilege. Nobody could be found to verify the report, but the statement is that the former Filipino chief has said that he desires to visit the United States to study the language and the institutions in order that he may return better fitted to assist his countrymen under the policy of control to be established by this government. These are busy times in the war department in connection with matters pertaining to the Philippine islands. While it is possible that Secretary Root may be able to dispense with some part of the large force in the department that was made necessary on account of the Spanish war, especially such clerks and officials as had particularly to do with the discharge of duties relative to the army in the field, the general in the Philippines is adding greatly to the work of the department in respect to civil affairs in the islands. The report of the Philippine commission in regard to the civil government was received at the department yesterday, and it will require some time and labor to go over its various provisions before the plan is approved by the secretary of war and President McKinley. The task of providing the new government is regarded by the insular bureau officials as a tremendous one, but it is believed that the commission has provided a plan that will be satisfactory. In the main the electoral franchise is extended to all residents of the island, but the right is withheld from those who are in arrears for taxes levied under the authority of the United States and also to those who participated in the insurrection after April of this year and other like provisions.

TEACHERS FOR PHILIPPINES.

Question of Transportation Worrying the Department.

Washington, May 26. — Secretary Root and Col. Edwards, chief of the insular bureau of the war department, are considering plans for transporting teachers to the Philippines. In view of the fact that the army transports have comparatively few state rooms, and they are assigned to officers, it is manifest that there will be no adequate facilities for carrying 1,000 teachers to Manila on these vessels under present arrangements. Col. Edwards has proposed to Secretary Root that one of the transports be set aside for the teachers and fitted up with state rooms for their accommodation. The Philippine commission has urged the secretary of war to send 1,000 teachers from this country at the earliest possible date, as it is considered advisable to have them there before the next school year begins. The insular bureau has been swamped with applications from school teachers who wish to go to the Philippines.

ABOLISHING RED TAPE.

Sensible Regulations Are Being Introduced in the War Department.

Washington, May 26.—A general order issued by the war department amends the army regulations so as to allow of the procurement of supplies and the engagement of services in the army by oral agreement in the manner common among business men when there is no time for advertisement. Another paragraph of the regulations is amended so that military stores and public property condemned and ordered sold may either be disposed of for cash at public auction or to the highest bidder in sealed proposals. The sale may be suspended by the officer in charge when, in his opinion, better prices can be obtained, except in the case of condemned animals.

ARMY ASSIGNMENTS.

Gen. MacArthur to Command the Department of Dakota.

Washington, May 26.—Instead of being assigned to duty in the United States upon the expiration of their present leave of absence, Brigadier General Fred D. Grant and Major General J. C. Bates will return to their stations in the Philippines. When Major General MacArthur returns he will probably be given a short leave and then be put in command of the department of Dakota. Major General S. B. M. Young will take command of the departments of California and Columbia.

BUSY DAY FOR M'KINLEY.

President Participates in Numerous Functions.

San Francisco, May 25. — President McKinley spent a fairly busy day. After breakfasting at the residence of Irving Scott he returned to his temporary home and received a delegation of federal officials. The reception was very informal. President McKinley asked the federal officials to provide a position for an old man, Ritter, who served in his regiment during the Civil war. Mr. Ritter lost a leg in battle and is now a resident of San Leandro. The president remarked that this was the first appointment he had asked for and hoped his old comrade would be provided for. The officials promised to do so. The most important event of the day came next. It was the president's visit to the Presidio, where he reviewed the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth volunteer infantry regiments, just returned from the Philippines to be mustered out of service. When the president mounted the reviewing stand the soldiers cheered him. In the afternoon the president was the guest of honor at the Union League club, the Ohio society, the Mexican War veterans, pioneers and the Native Sons. The latter three societies presented him a paper weight containing $350 worth of gold. At each reception the president responded briefly to presentation speeches. On his way to dinner President McKinley stopped at Union Square and turned over the first shovelful of sod where the monument to the American navy in commemoration of Admiral Dewey's victory at Manila bay is to be erected. Last night the president attended a reception given in his honor by the G. A. R. posts of the city.

REVISION OF CREED.

Occupies the Attention of Presbyterian Orators.

Philadelphia, May 25. — With eloquence born of the solemn importance of the question, commissioners to the Presbyterian general assembly yesterday began the debate on the revision of the confession of faith. Brilliant leaders of the church advanced their views in a calm, dispassionate manner, and the entir discussion was devoid of acrimony. With a full realization of the great importance of the subject the assembly proceeded to consider and investigate thoroughly every detail of the proposed changes in the creed. Calvary church was not large enough to accommodate the throngs who clamored for admission.

A number of people who witnessed the fight attempted to lynch McCarthy, but trouble was averted by the arrivhl of the police.

There Will Be No Protracted Litigation Over the Gilman Estate.

Atlanta, Ga., May 25.—Frazer J. Gilman of this city, one of the claimants of the estate of George Gilman, the eccentric millionaire who died in March last at Bridgeport, Conn., has returned home. Mr. Gilman announces that the contest over his brother's millions has about reached a settlement, and expects that an adjustment and partition of the estate will be made in the next few weeks. The heirs, it seems, have about concluded not to make a fight, but are willing to have the estate divided into shares.

PROMOTION FOR CORTELYOU.

Rumors That He Will Succeed Postmaster General Smith.

Washington, May 25.—Seemingly reliable information has been received here that George Cortelyou, secretary to the president, is soon to receive a very substantial promotion. It is said the president intends to put him in the cabinet, providing matters work out as he now anticipates. In spite of explicit denials, the story still goes around that Postmaster General Smith will soon retire, and this is the place which rumor says Cortelyou is to have.

Southampton, May 25. — A consultation was held last evening on board the steam yacht Erin by Sir Thomas Lipton, Mr. Jameson, Mr. Ure, Mr. Ratsey and Capt. Sycamore. It was decided to cable to the commodore of the New York club asking that the races for the America's cup be postponed until the first week in October. The Shamrock II. will proceed to the Clyde as soon as possible to refit. When she is ready she will have further trials on the Clyde. Sir Thomas Lipton has received dozens of cable dispatches from the United States expressing sympathy and condolence. Sir Thomas was asked if he would send both the Shamrocks to America. He said he did not see any reason why he should. He admitted that Shamrock I. was much faster now than when she was in America, but he and others known that she is not as fast as the challenger can be made.

Postponement Asked.

New York, May 25.—Secretary Oddie has received a cablegram from Sir Thomas Lipton asking a postponement of the races until the first week in October. In case the club should not find it convenient or agreeable to postpone the race until that time Sir Thomas agrees to bring over the Shamrock I. A meeting of the committee will be called at once to act upon the matter. It is believed in well informed circles that Sir Thomas' request will be granted.

Solitary Confinement Too Much for the Man Who Killed King Humbert.

Rome, May 25.—The strain of solitary confinement caused Gaetano Bressci, the slayer of King Humbert, to strangle himself to death in his cell in Santo Stefano prison. His jailers say that Bressci's nerves collapsed.

Just a year ago Bressci, an anarchist of Paterson, N. J., sailed from New York to assassinate King Humbert. His opportunity came at Monza on July 29 last. Bressci was sentenced to life imprisonment and was confined in a coffin-shaped cell hewn out of solid rock beneath the prison walls. His food was bread and water, passed through a narrow slit in the door. He was forbidden to speak to the jailers or himself.

SAYS HE IS "ELIJAH."

Remarkable Declaration of John Alexander Dowie.

Chicago, June 4.—"I am Elijah the prophet, who appeared first as Elijah himself, second as John the Baptist, and who now comes in me, the restorer of all things. Elijah was a prophet, John was a preacher, but I combine in myself the attributes of prophet, priest and ruler over men. Gaze on me, then: I say it fearlessly. Make the most of it, you wretches in ecclesiastical garb. I am he that is the living physical and spiritual embodiment of Elijah, and my commission to earth a third time has been prophesied by Malachi, by God himself, by his son Jesus, by Peter and three thousand years ago by Moses. All who believe me to be in very truth all of this will stand up."

And over 3,000 people rose to their feet and greeted the declaration with cheers and handclapping. John Alexander Dowie, true to his promises, made this statement from the platform of the auditorium last night in the presence of 5,000 people. It was the culmination of a frenzied speech in which he denounced everybody and everything not in Zion, cursed the pope and the Roman Catholic church, spat literally at masonry, the newspapers and the Bankers of Chicago and raged and tore up and down the stage like a madman.

MUCH DAMAGE DONE.

Heavy Storm Passes Over Pittsburg and Vicinity.

Pittsburg, June 4.—One of the heaviest spring storms known to the government weather bureau here passed over this section yesterday. Much damage was done, and four people were badly hurt during the storm. The storm lasted only fifteen minutes but in that time .3 of an inch of rain fell, heavy hail ruined many trees, the wind blew down several small houses. At Whittaker, near Homestead, a partly finished store and dwelling was wrecked, burying in the ruins three boys and a man, all of whom were badly hurt. The man, Daniel Martin, may die from the effects of injuries to his head and spine. The boys were dug out of the ruins in bad shape, one remaining unconscious for some time, but all will recover. The boys had been playing ball and twenty-five or thirty took refuge from the storm in the building. When the collapse came all escaped except those mentioned.

SEVENTY PEOPLE BURNED.

In the Fire Which Raged on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

Chicago, June 4.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Oaxaca, Mex., says: Further details of the great fire which raged on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec for several days have been received here. Over seventy people were unable to escape the rapid progress of the flames and were burned to death. The fire started on a coffee plantation, and, owing to the dryness of the vegetation it was soon beyond control and wrought great destruction to growing crops. Many thousand acres of coffee trees, bananas, orange trees and other tropical products were destroyed. A number of plantation buildings were destroyed. Those who met death in the flames were all families of plantation laborers who, being unable to escape the fire, perished in their huts. The fire burned for ten days and was finally quenched by a heavy tropical rain.

TOWN WIPED OUT.

Fire, Evidently of Incendiary Origin, Destroys a Texas Town.

Beaumont, Tex., June 4.—The little town of Jasper, capital of Jasper county, was entirely wiped out yesterday by fire. Seventeen houses, including every business house in the place and a number of residences, were destroyed. The town has no fire department. Previous to the fire the postoffice safe and the safe of the county treasurer had been blown open and robbed. The conclusion of the people of Jasper is that burglars blew open the safes and then set fire to the town to cover up their crime and create an excitement which would afford them an opportunity to escape. The loss by the fire is estimated at $100,000; it could not be learned what the thieves secured from the safes.

BUTTE IS ALARMED

LARGE CRACKS APPEAR IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE CITY.

Strange Sliding Movement of the Earth Under the City Which Has Been Noticeable at Intervals for Several Years Has Again Manifested Itself—Five Large Cracks in Different Parts of the City—Gas and Water Mains Frequently Broken—Citizens Are Alarmed.

Butte, Mont., June 4.—The strange sliding movement of the city of Butte which has been noticeable at intervals for several years has again manifested itself by five large cracks in the earth in different parts of the city. The largest occurred on West Galena street, where a crack twelve inches wide and of considerable length and depth has appeared. Three of the openings occurred on the west side of the town and two on the east side. There is no caving, but a distinct parting of the earth, and the granite walls can easily be seen in them. The gas and water companies have much trouble on account of the strange movement, which frequently breaks their underground pipes. City Engineer Rickenbach says the engineering department of the city encounters the same trouble, as elevations and bench marks in certain parts of the city are constantly changing, particularly west of Main street and north of Broadway, where the marks have been known to shift to the extent of a foot in a very short space of time. What is the cause of the strange phenomenon is not known, but the continuance of it is beginning to alarm some of the residents.

King Victor Emmanuel has just completed the first volume of the history of Italian coins and medals, upon which he has been engaged for a long time. The book contains about 12,000 illustrations. It is estimated it will cost $100,000.

A tablet has been placed upon the house in Richmond, Va., in which Gen. Robert E. Lee's family lived during the war. The building is a plain three-story and basement red brick house on Franklin street, near Seventh, and has been occupied by the Virginia Historical Society for some time past. The tablet reads: "The residence of Gen. Robert E. Lee from 1861 to 1865."

The report comes from Florida that a company at St. Cloud in that state has succeeded in making excellent paper from the leaves of the palmetto. Should this prove correct, palmetto would appear as a rival to wood-pulp, a feature of the situation being the rapid growth of the scrub palmetto; it is said that two growths of it may be cut from the same land each year. Some thousands of square miles of Florida are covered with it.

Another balloon voyage across the sea is announced. Comte Henri de la Vaulx is preparing for an aerial voyage over the Mediterranean in July or August, according to the selection made by M. Flamarion and other wind and weather experts. The count is undoubtedly one of the most prominent balloonists, although his first efforts were intended as a pastime. He considers that the first practical fruits in the way of aerial navigation will be found on the ocean where a continuance of unaltered temperature gives increased steadiness. The starting point will be from the Isthmus of Sablettes, near Toulon. A shed will be erected on the beach to make all preparations for a departure at short notice.

A dearth of violets may not sound alarming to those who are not aware of the great importance of this flower in perfumery. At present great distress prevails all along the Riviera, and especially at Nice owing to the failure of the violet harvest. The exceptionally cold spring and the bitter winds have destroyed the blooms and the peasantry are in such a pitiful condition that a public appeal has been made to assist them until the young plants can be bedded out. The orange flower crop has also been very bad. The marked change in the climate of Nice is said to be due to the frequent fires which have destroyed the forests in the Estereals, and it is now proposed to replant them, and to pass a vigorous law for their better preservation.

For some years there has lived at the foot of Nagyssal, in Hungary, a hermit named Bodmuller, who, dwelling in a miserable hut, edified all the locality by his austerity and piety. Some weeks ago, however, he came under police surveillance, and to escape their undesirable attentions, he determined to set fire to his hut with a view of giving rise to the idea that he had perished in the flames. Unfortunately for the success of this device, he was recognized at the West Station at Buda-Pesth by a detective, who took him to the police station. On the way the holy man amused himself by throwing money at the crowd, but, unfortunately, the coins were bad. The "hermit" was in reality a base coiner; and he now occupies a "cell" in the prison of the capital of Hungary.

Doctor Nagusha, the Japanese bacteriologist, has made a formal proposition that all civilized nations unite in an organized effort to rid the world of rats. His own government, he declares, stands ready to bear its part, and the suggestion has called forth a remarkably unanimous verdict of approval from the doctors of many lands. Ways and means have not yet been formulated, and it is in that direction, of course, that the greatest difficulty lies. Whether or not rats can be exterminated, or anywhere near exterminated, is a question yet to be determined. But in any event their numbers can be enormously reduced; and the certainty with which the spread of the bubonic plague in India and in Hawaii has been traced to rats makes even a reduction in numbers worth the effort it requires.

Andrew Sandager, President of the State Bank of Lisbon, N. D., and a former State Senator of North Dakota, has introduced an innovation in marriage ethics. Without consulting even the bride-elect he procured a license to wed and then summoned Miss Carrie Johnson, who was visiting at the soldier's home here, to present herself before Justice Grover. Upon reaching there she met Mr. Sandager and showed much surprise when he stated his purpose. She did not object, however, and the Justice performed the ceremony.

ASKS LEGAL ADVICE

PRESIDENT CALLS IN SENATORS SPOONER AND PLATT.

Important Conference at the White House Regarding the Philippine Question—Doubt the President's Power to Levy Customs Taxes Against the United States—President Will Take No Action Until His Legal Advisers Have Prepared an Opinion Defining His Powers.

Washington, June 1.—President McKinley was yesterday afternoon in conference with Secretary Root, Senator Spooner and Senator Platt of Connecticut. The conference was in reference to the government's position in the Philippines since the supreme court decided that "cession and possession" change the territory from foreign to domestic. The president has had prepared a new tariff for the Philippines which is ready for promulgation. The Taft commission has about completed the preliminary work for the establishment of a civil government in the Philippines which shall make the military power secondary after July 1.

The president and the Taft commission are operating under the Spooner amendment to the military appropriation bill, which provides that "all military, civil and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine islands shall, until otherwise provided by congress, be vested in such person or persons and exercised in such manner as the president shall direct for the establishment of the civil government." The Situation Is So Serious that the president has called upon not only Secretary Root and Attorney General Knox, but also upon Senator Spooner, the author of the act, and Senator Platt for legal advice. He must shape his policy in harmony with the decision of the supreme court in the De Lima case, which declares the islands to be domestic territory and not foreign territory. He desires to know if in the light of the supreme court congress has delegated to him power to make tariff regulations—a power which under the Constitution is vested solely in congress. There is no question about his power to levy and collect local taxes in the Philippines and customs tariffs against foreign countries for the benefit of civil government in the islands. But there is grave doubt as to his power to levy customs taxes against the United States or impose an export tax on products sent from that country to the United States, thus discriminating against the country over which he exercises the authority of chief executive. The president will take no action in the Philippines until his legal advisers have gone over the decisions of the supreme court and prepared an opinion as to his exact power under the Spooner amendment.

MRS. M'KINLEY STILL VERY ILL.

Symptoms Being Closely Watched by Her Physicians.

Washington, June 1.—Mrs. McKinley had a fairly comfortable day yesterday but still feels the effect of the fatigue incident to the long trip from San Francisco to Washington. The physicians hope now that she is again safely established in the White House that the slight improvement which has manifested itself since leaving San Francisco will be continued and that soon she may be able to sit up. She is still very seriously ill and her every symptom is being carefully watched by those having charge of the distinguished patient. Dr. P. M. Rixey, the physician in charge of her case, spent some time at the bedside of the patient yesterday. Associated with him in a consulting capacity are also Surgeon General Sternberg of the army and Dr. W. W. Johnston of this city. The president spent most of the day at the White House in the company of his wife. Late in the afternoon in company with Secretary Root he went for a drive, taking a ride in the suburbs, but he returned to the White House in about an hour.

Memorial Day Exercises Are Fittingly Observed.

Washington, June 1.—Memorial day was observed in Washington with the usual ceremonies. The weather, which has been stormy for the past week, was delightful, and exercises at the different cemeteries where soldiers are buried were largely attended. Not only were there many contributions of flowers and greens from individuals for the purpose of decorating the graves of the soldier dead, but the resources of the national government were added to these, and all of the rich spring blossoms of the botanical gardens, the parks and the other government conservatories were freely placed at the disposal of the decoration committees.

Iowa Falls, Iowa, June 1—It was discovered last evening that the residence of Isaac Tucker had been looted and much property confiscated. Mr. Tucker and wife are absent in Chicago and the house has been unoccupied for some time. The police are confident they have at least one of the men implicated in the raid in the person of one Doyle, who was arrested the day previous on the charge of disorderly conduct. A portion of the goods were found in Doyle's tool chest at the Illinois Central station, the man having been employed here with a gang of graders. It is thought Doyle had assistance from local talent that may be implicated by an investigation.

The German guards have been withdrawn from several gates and the government of the city passes into Chinese hands for two weeks. Li Hung Chang says he is prepared to accept the responsibility for the city now, but for the province he wants a delay of six weeks. Many are apprehensive that the powers, after their long torpor, are now proceeding too hastily.

RAISED A TUMULT.

Vienna, June 1.—The government's canal bill has aroused bitter opposition, and the debate in the reichsrath, continuing until early this morning, was marked by stormy scenes. The pan-Germans so fiercely abused Dr. Lueger, who supported the bill, that the sitting had to be suspended, the president being quite unable to quiet the tumult. Prince von Schwarzenburg, in opposing the bill, declared that the construction of canals provided an open door for foreign invasion, and that it would seriously prejudice agriculture. Finally the pan-Germans walked out of the house, Dr. Lueger denouncing them as "contemptable traitors to the country."

PRESIDENTIAL PARTY ARRIVES IN WASHINGTON.

Journey Through Ohio Marked by Only Four Stops, the Longest at Canton, Where Mrs. McKinley Was Greeted by Her Sister—Old Friends and Neighbors Pay Their Respects — Mrs. McKinley Has a Very Comfortable Day—End of a Journey Covering Almost Seven Thousand Miles.

Pittsburg, May 31.—When the president and his party end the long trip across the continent upon their arrival at Washington this morning they will have been gone thirty-two days, and will have traveled approximately 6,675 miles. Yesterday's ride was across the president's native state—Ohio. Only four stops were made, the longest at Canton, the president's home town, where the train remained twenty minutes to give Mrs. McKinley an opportunity to see her sister, Mrs. M. C. Barber, and her niece, Miss Ida Barber. A number of the president's old friends and neighbors were at the station, and they were overjoyed to learn from the president's own lips that Mrs. McKinley's improvement had continued slowly but steadily. Judge Day, former secretary of state, Judge Baldwin and Mayor Robertson came aboard the Olympia, but did not see Mrs. McKinley. Her sister was with her until the train left and her niece remained aboard. The latter will go to Washington with her sister, Miss Mary Barber, who accompanied the party to the Pacific coast, and will be the guest of Mrs. McKinley at the White House until the latter is able

To Return to Canton.

Many of the stations along the line of the road through Ohio were decorated with American flags. At Lima, the first stop in the state, the school children were given a half-holiday to permit them to go to the depot to see the president. Mrs. McKinley had a very comfortable day. It had been raining in Ohio for several days and there was no dust or heat to make the journey oppressive. The brief visit with her sister at Canton seemed to brighten Mrs McKinley's spirits and doubtless did her much good. The train arrived at Pittsburg at 7:35 p. m. and left for Washington thirty minutes later. It is due to reach Washington at 7:30 this morning.

The reception here was devoid of all excitement. The good sized crowd that had gathered at the station evidently desired to disturb Mrs. McKinley as little as possible and when the president appeared on the rear platform as the train puled out, the usual cheering was omitted, but the kindly feeling was evidenced by the raising of hats and waving of handkerchiefs. The president responded by repeatedly bowing and raising his hat.

NON-UNION MEN ASSAULTED.

Employes in Indianapolis Foundry Roughly Handled.

Indianapolis, May 31.—The non-union employes of Chandler & Taylor's foundry and machine shops were assaulted by a gang of striking union men as they left the shops, and but for the prompt response of the police to a riot call serious consequences would have followed. As it was, Michael McNulty was knocked down by the strikers and kicked and beaten.

COAL GOES UP.

Another Advance of Ten Cents Per Ton Is Announced.

New York, May 31.—The June coal circular of the Philadelphia & Reading company will announce an increase of 10 cents per ton in the price of anthracite. FARMER ASSAULTED.

Three Unknown Men Beat Him to Insensibility.

La Crosse, Wis., May 31. — John Bloomer, a young farmer residing east of this city, was assaulted by three unknown men last night and pounded to insensibility. He was awakened by a rapping at the door. Upon opening the door three men stood outside, one of whom asked for a wrench, saying the wheel on their wagon was loose. Bloomer went to the barn and gave them a wrench, when they attacked him, pounding him into insensibility, leaving him there and then drove away. Bloomer is confined to his bed and is in a serious condition.

GOULD BOYS LOCATED.

Quietly Living With Relatives in England.

Oshkosh, Wis., May 31.—The Baring Gould boys who were kidnapped from their mother in this city some weeks ago by their father, are in England. Detectives hired to trace the boys have so reported. They and their father went from Chicago to Montreal and from there the boys were shipped to England, where they will remain with the relatives of the father, who are said to be wealthy. Baring Gould then returned to British Columbia, where he has mining interests. There will be no effort made at present to secure the return of the boys.

The report shows the value of the manufacturing products of the state in 1900 were $9,183,114, against $6,028,107 for 1890. The number of manufacturing establishments were increased during the ten years from 382 to 1,130; the capital invested from $2,894,553 to $5,396,490. There was an increase of 60 per cent in the average of wage earners and of 61 per cent in the total wages paid.

RAIN IS NEEDED.

Wheat in North Dakota Shows Need of Moisture.

Carrington, N. D., May 31. — The wheat crop in this immediate vicinity is looking well at present, but it is commencing to show signs of dryness; no rain having fallen since early spring. Many farmers are waiting for rain before sowing their flax, as the ground is not in very good condition now. The hot weather is just the thing for the Russian thistle, and west and south of us they are coming as thick as they can grow.

CHINA WANTS TIME

DESIRES FORTY YEARS IN WHICH TO PAY INDEMNITY.

Just Ten Years More Than the Time Agreed Upon by the Foreign Ministers—Allies Anxious for Settlement of the Indemnity Question That They May Devote Their Attention to Other Important Questions — Count von Waldersee Points Out to Li Hung Chang China's Opportunity.

Pekin, June 1.— Another edict has been issued by the throne and has been received here in regard to the payment of indemnities. China consents to the payment of 4 per cent interest per annum, but asks that the payments run for a term of forty years instead of thirty as heretofore agreed upon by the ministers. The ministers are anxious that the indemnity question shall be settled in order that they may take up the trade questions and regulation, which will require protracted investigation. These investigations will not be taken up for the purpose of securing additional favors from China as part of the financial compensation, but to settle all the points in the protocol and give the court no excuse for not returning to Pekin. The questions of reform in the government can be discussed subsequently. Field Marshal Count von Waldersee has written to Li Hung Chang approving of the occupation of certain districts by the Troops Now on the Way here from Shangtung and Honan. Count von Waldersee also says that this movement will be extended to districts nearer Pekin, and if the troops preserve order and protect the people the allies will evacuate Pao-ting-fu and Pekin. These troops from Shangtung and Honan, numbering 10,000, are now co-operating and others are expected to join them shortly. Count von Waldersee in his letter to Li Hung Chang says:

"Now is the opportunity for the Chinese to show their fidelity and patriotism. When the allies see that China is able to act independently, fully performing her duties and needing no assistance, then the allies will respect this my wish and hope. Complete evacuation will then be possible. Each day the allies remain China's expense increases."

Li Hung Chang is elated, but many people express the fear that the Chinese officers will prove to be incompetent and not equal to the expectations of the foreign commanders.

PAINLESS SURGERY.

By Use of Cocaine the Patient Remains Conscious but Does Not Suffer.

New York, June 1.—For the first time in surgical history a patient was operated on while under the influence of temporary paralysis, induced by an injection of cocaine yesterday at Bellevue hospital. The operation is likely to prove an entire success. It consists of injection into the spinal canal, thus producing paralysis of the lower part of the body, so that a patient will not suffer from the amputation of a foot or leg, but will be perfectly conscious while the operation is in progress. The value of this new method is in saving the wear and tear on the heart and the danger of possible death which the producing of an unconscious state by ether or chloroform may cause.

COMING FOR IDEAS.

Pearson, the London Publisher, to Make a Brief Visit to the United States.

New York, June 1.—The World says: C. Arthur Pearson, the millionaire newspaper and magazine proprietor of London, is coming to the United States to study American newspaper methods. He will spend only a week in the United States.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

None except scientists can afford to take chances with their fruit trees, in the way of demonstrating new and untried theories. Recently we have heard a good deal about ringing, girdling, stripping off bark and the like, and there is a danger that some man that has more orchard than orcharding experience may be carried away by the claims made for those processes, and may ruin a good part of his plantation. At the Missouri experiment station stripping was practiced for two years, and careful records made of the results, which did not prove beneficial. As a temporary stimulant of fruit production any one of these three methods is serviceable, but such temporary stimulation is destructive to the fruitfulness of the tree, and often leads to premature death.

There are years when fruit has not the flavor usually belonging to it. Especially is this the case with strawberries and melons. On investigation it is found that rainfall and sunshine are the principal factors in determining flavors. In very wet seasons fruits grow large, but contain little sugar. In dry seasons much more sugar is elaborated, and this sugar enters very largely into the indefinable something we call flavor. Prof. Troop of Indiana, touching on the same subject, says: "An excessive amount of rain is undoubtedly one of the chief causes of trouble. It is a well-known fact that during a very wet season strawberries are of much poorer quality, containing a less amount of sugar, than when the ripening season is comparatively dry. The same is true with muskmelons; the crop may be larger during a wet season, the fruit may be finer in appearance, but the sugar content which gives the melon its delicious flavor is comparatively low. Hence it frequently happens that a variety may give good satisfaction one season, and be very unsatisfactory the next. Thorough drainage, either naturally or artificially, will do much toward preventing trouble from this source. The use of fertilizers, rich in potash and phosphoric acid, will have a tendency to produce a fruit of high quality." It is doubtless true that selection of varieties for planting will do much to give flavor, even in a wet season.

The introduction of the olive into the United States and its cultivation in the semi-arid regions of the Pacific slope and of the southern rim of the so-called "Great American Desert," means much for this country. The olive is a fruit that grows in favor on acquaintance, and its use increases rapidly wherever it gets a first attention. It has played a very large part in the economic history of the world, for a period of at least 4,000 years. It has made more than one ancient locality rich. A striking illustration of this is seen in the economic history of Tunis, in Northern Africa. A part of that country is a high, arid plateau, which now affords only meager pasturage to flocks. But there was a time when this same region was covered with populous and prosperous cities, with equally prosperous suburbs, among which might be mentioned El Djem (Thysdrus), Cillium and Thelepte. Where a few shepherds now barely subsist, anciently dwelt myriads of human beings. The secret of its ancient wealth was the vast forests of olive trees that once covered this plateau. The raising and exporting of olives made the communities rich. When the Turks came in they cut down these olive forests to make new pastures, and as a result got nearly barren wastes. In the eleventh century there were more than 200 thriving villages in the neighborhood of Gafsa. The olive forests had not always been there, but had been planted and extended since the times of Sallust. What was done in Africa centuries ago will doubtless be done there again, and will be repeated in the southwestern United States. Our deserts will yet "bloom and blossom like the rose."

Sugar Beet Planting.

The sugar beet will grow on almost any kind of soil that will produce good grain crops. If the soil be too alkali to produce a good grain crop, it may also produce sugar beets, the beets taking more alkali than grain. While fall plowing is desirable in many localities, spring plowing is practiced extensively. Old beet-growers say that when the land is to be plowed in the spring, the plowing should be done only just before the beet seed is to be put in. In Colorado and the west, subsoiling is advocated, and at some of the stations decided gains in weight of beets have followed its use.

Early planting gives largest crops, but the planting may be as late as the latter part of May. As to depth of planting much must depend on the nature of the soil and the amount of moisture it contains. If the soil be clayey, it is evident that the sowing cannot be as deep as where the soil is sandy. If the soil be naturally dry the seed must be placed deeper than it should be where the soil is naturally wet. Beet growers consider the depth for planting beet seed on an ordinary soil to be from one to one and a half inches deep.

The distance apart to plant the beets must depend on the system used in growing them. Where beets are to be irrigated the problem differs considerably from the same problem in localities where the natural humidity is sufficient for all the requirements of the beets. In humid parts the rows can advantageously be placed about twenty inches apart. In irrigated fields the rows are often arranged so that only every other furrow will need irrigation. One experimenter, Mr. Watrous, recommends double rows 12 inches apart, with 24 inches between each two rows and the next two rows. Prof. Cooke disagrees with this to the extent of advocating double rows 11 inches apart and 27 inches between each two rows and the next.

There is nothing fixed in agriculture and there is nothing fixed in beet growing. The amount of seed even to be used varies enormously, according to the man that does the beet raising and the process to be followed. There are two diametrically opposite systems in vogue. One is to plant the seeds so that few beets will be raised, but so that each beet will grow in the place where it is to remain. This is expensive of labor, though by it good crops have been raised with three to five pounds of seed to the acre. The other practice is to sow from fifteen to twenty pounds of seed to the acre, produce a great number of plants and pull most of them up in thinning. There is labor about this method also, but it is more popular than is the other, and is probably more practicable.

Chinese Agricultural Methods.

Mr. Wildman, consul general at Hongkong, in a communication to the department of state a few months ago, stated that there is no market in Southern China for American harvesting machinery such as reapers, mowers, horse rakes, etc., nor forsteam and gang plows, seed drills and harrows. Mr. Wildman said by way of explanation: "The agricultural land of Southern China is divided into small holdings, many of which are not over an acre in size, and very few running over 10 acres. Every available inch of this land is under cultivation, and the planting and reaping is all done by hand; where plows are used they are of home manufacture and are as primitive as those of Biblical times. The majority of the peasantry live at the rate of from 2 to 5 cents a day, and even if they could afford to purchase modern American farming machinery there would be no room to use it. The nearest thing to such machinery that I have seen in southern China is a fanning mill, which is easily constructed by the ingenious Chinaman. The grain is either trod out of the straw by water buffaloes or whipped over an open tub. Even if an entire village should combine to buy an American thrashing machine, it would be used but once, as it would be considered too wasteful both in the way it mangles the straw and the grain and in its expensive upkeep. In southern China there are no horses except the diminutive China pony, and, as the agricultural country is mostly flat, there is no way to utilize water power. As for steam, it is an impossibility, fuel being one of the most expensive Chinese luxuries. As long as labor has almost no value and flesh and blood is the cheapest thing on the market, I can not recommend American manufacturers to waste good printed matter and postage stamps on so impossible a field."

Grain Crops and Fruit in Great Britain.

Our English correspondent writes to us under date of April 30: "The sowing of what we in this vicinity call spring corn (as we do not limit the generic term 'corn' to one description of it) is later this year than the oldest farmer has ever known it to be. At least the general start was late, as it did not take place till April 17, though some farmers had made a little progress earlier. Until that date we had not had two consecutive days free from rain or frost from the beginning of February. But since the 16th of April we have had constantly dry weather and nearly all the sowing is finished. The winter wheat crop generally looks well. I now wish to refer to some nonsense about English apples. Your quotation from the American consul at Nottingham to the effect that 'only a few of the hardier specimens of apples ripen in this climate' is arrant nonsense. The best apples in the world ripen perfectly here, and have a flavor that no American apple can approach. About 2,000 varieties are grown, 200 of these extensively. Considerably over 200 varieties, and many lots of each, were exhibited in splendid condition at the last Crystal Palace fruit show, and this fruit included some long-keeping varieties. We grow more than four times as many apples as we import."

The Wheat Acreage.

Returns to the United States statistician made up to May 1 show the area under winter wheat in cultivation on that date to have been about 28,267,000 acres. This is 2,015,000 acres, or 6.7 per cent, less than the area sown last fall, but 2,032,000 acres, or 7.7 per cent, in excess of the winter wheat acreage harvested last year. Of the reduction, about one-half is reported from Texas and California, due in the former state to the ravages of the wheat plant-louse, and in the latter to the cutting, as is not unusual in that state, of a considerable acreage for forage. In the states that had 1,000,000 acres or upward sown last fall the following percentages are reported as abandoned or cut for forage: Missouri, 1; Kansas, 1; Illinois, 1.9; Pennsylvania, 2; Indiana, 2.5; Ohio, 3.2; Tennessee, 4.7; Michigan, 9.6; Oklahoma, 12.5; California, 18, and Texas, 42.4.

The United Kingdom has 30,000,000 sheep; France, 20,000,000; Argentina, 74,000,000.

Dandelion farms near Pottsville, Pa., are very profitable.

What Affects Clover Seeding?

From the Farmers' Review: In the mind of thoughtful, intelligent farmers very interesting problems are continually presenting themselves for solution. The amount of general knowledge possessed by them is not usually sufficient for their guidance in seeking answers to the questions arising. For this reason they are apt to ascribe incorrect causes for effects which they observe. An illustration of this is found in the popular theory that the season, more than the time of cutting the first crop of clover, affects the yield of seed on the second crop. To understand this problem we must draw upon a knowledge of agricultural chemistry and plant feeding and the elaboration of elementary food in the plant. Seeding is the effort of the plant to reproduce itself when it has reached a certain period of growth. As the elaboration of seed depends upon the presence and action of phosphoric acid in the plant, the movement of phosphorus in it furnishes the key to the solution of the problem.

Take the plant in four stages of growth. As a young plant in full health about 6 to 8 inches tall, from 22 per cent to 25 per cent of the total phosphoric acid necessary for full development of the matured crop has been taken up from the root, and about 50 per cent of this amount is found in the upper leaves. After it has obtained about one-third more growth, over 40 per cent of the phosphoric acid has been brought up, of which from 60 per cent to 65 per cent is found in the heads and stems and leaves close up to the heads. When the plant has grown still larger and reached full bloom, 70 per cent to 75 per cent of the required phosphoric acid has been received from beneath the ground, and 80 per cent of this has found its way into the head and blossoms. Finally, when the seed has been perfected, fully 90 per cent of the total phosphoric acid taken by the plant has passed from the structure to the seed. If the crop is cut when 40 per cent and upwards of the phosphorus needed for full development and reproduction has been taken up and from 60 per cent to 80 per cent of this reached the upper parts of the plants it will require a very rich feeding of phosphate to enable it to repair damage, and, besides building a new plant provide nourishment for seed. Few soils are equal to such a strain, but as farmers like to get as much maturity as possible in the hay crop so as to provide a good article of fodder, they must be careful to look well to the phosphatic feeding of clover fields. This will be more fully appreciated if we bear in mind that two tons of clover hay on a meadow calls for 40 per cent more phosphorus than thirty bushels of wheat, sixty-five bushels of corn or fifty bushels of oats.

Any effect of the season on the seed development of the second crop must generally be ascribed to the rapid growth of the first crop deceiving the farmer into the belief that the large growth had attained corresponding maturity. In such cases a chemical examination of the hay of the first crop would show it to be lacking in feeding value in full proportion to its bulk and weight.

While on this question it is interesting to observe that the researches of Dr. Wagner emphasize most decidedly the necessity of the phosphate and potash manures for clovers grown for manurial purposes. Ordinarily eighty pounds of nitrogen supplied to the soil from an acre of two tons of clover is good work, but it is found that over 250 pounds of nitrogen can be obtained on an acre from the atmosphere by supplying abundant phosphoric acid in addition to potash. On heavy soils the potash has not generally to be supplied as manure, but on said soil deficient in potash we are called upon to supply it as well as the phosphate.—Thomas Wallace.

Some Orange-Growing Localities.

It is stated on good authority that the orange orchard area at Riverside, California, covers thirty square miles, or 19,200 acres, on which are growing 1,536,000 orange trees. The money value of the crop approximates $6,000,000 annually, or about $670 for each man, woman, and child in the district.

It has been calculated that there are in Italy 5,400,000 orange trees which yield on an average 1,600,000,000 oranges per year, or 300 oranges per tree. In the province of Seville, in Spain, where the largest quantity of oranges is grown in Europe, the average annual yield per tree is estimated at 600 oranges. The island of St. Michael, in the Azores, produces on an area of 265 acres 350,000,000 oranges, which are almost entirely shipped to England. In 1899 the total export of oranges from Spain exceeded 1,000,000,000. Greece exported in 189 some 50,000,000 oranges.

Some years ago the mantis, an insect-eating insect, was brought to New York state from abroad, presumably in a shipment of nursery stock. It has become a popular ally of farmers and horticulturists, as it kills all kinds of insects except ants. It is found commonly in France and Germany, where it is prized as the foe of destructive pests.

The common practice of plowing up, or digging up at random, the young plants from a strawberry bed is not conducive to improvement of the varieties. The most successful growers are learning that it pays to select from the best individuals each generation. In fact it is advisable to keep a patch on purpose for breeding.

River Jordan water is now exported regularly for baptismal purposes.

London is said to be richer in trees than any other European city.

HIGHFLYERS' BAND

Latest Trust is One in Expert Balloonists.

Now there is a trust in balloonists. Why not? The supply is small and the demand large. These are the ideal conditions for a monopoly. Paul D. Howse saw the chance and seized it. He is a Chicago newspaper man, quick to spot a good thing and ready for a hazard. He was connected with an amusement park last year and had much to do with the engagement of aeronauts. He found most of them an irresponsible class. They were careless about keeping their dates. Sometimes they were late, sometimes they failed to report at all. They were negligent about their apparatus. Sometimes the balloon was old enough to be in constant danger of bursting, sometimes the attachments were out of condition, threatening accidents. Between the disappointments and the risks of killing aeronauts Mr. Howse grew haggard, nervous and melancholy. In brooding over this state of things an idea came to him. Why not take the pick of the balloonists of the country, put them under contract and provide them with new balloons equipped with all the safety devices that could be invented? The more he thought of it the better it seemed to him. He consulted with Harry La Thoma, a veteran aeronaut of nineteen years' experience, with a record of 200 ascensions without a scratch. La Thoma said: "That's a great scheme. I'll go you." They interested some capital, and the balloon trust was born. The trust immediately started out to get a corner on the sober, reliable, expert aeronauts in the country. It already has sixteen of them under contract. Six are women, one of whom is an Indian. There is an independent aeronaut here and there, but the trust has secured the greatest aggregation of sky-scraping dare-devils ever brought toghter in one band. Managers of country fairs, Fourth of July hoorahs and other out-of-door celebrations may have to look to Chicago for their high-flyers if they want balloon ascensions. There are said to be only three first-class balloon builders in the country. Two of these are in Illinois and La Thoma is one of them. He is also something of a genius and has been inventing various appliances for safeguarding men and women who drop through space hanging to parachutes. The speed of the parachute depends on the size of the hole in the top and he has figured out a table for the regulation of parachute speed. He has invented a mechanical contrivance for releasing the parachute from the balloon instead of depending on a slipknot. He has also invented a mechanism by which, on pressing a spring the parachute must open. With this appliance it is possible to drop like a shot for a thousand feet with a closed parachute, open it within 200 feet of the earth and alight safely, a feat well calculated to give the spectators plenty of thrill for their money. The trust has set its brains to work inventing new acts also, and the coming season promises several daring novelties. One of these will be a balloon and a parachute race. Two balloons will start heavenward together. When they are up 2,000 feet or more a gun will be fired on the earth. The two aeronauts will release their parachutes and start a race to the ground. In another act a man and woman will ascend on a single balloon. They will drop in parachutes with an interval of fifteen seconds between them, making a sort of tandem race to the earth. A third novelty provides a race between a woman and a monkey. After cutting the monkey loose in a parachute the woman will release herself. It was Mr. Howse who made such a hit last year by the use of monkeys in ballooning, and other measures are to be taken for their safety. Thus the balloon trust will begin its career with sixteen aeronauts, a dozen monkeys, a stock of new balloons and nine thrilling acts.

Did Not All Succeed

Efforts to Capture Noted Enemies Not as Happy as Funston's.

Gen. Funston's achievement in capturing Aguinaldo recalls earlier attempts made by officers of other armies to make prisoners of the leaders of the hostile forces. The first attempt at seizing a general was never carried out; it involved too many persons, and the plotters engaged in it worked from the inside, not from without, as Funston did, and their plans were overheard. This was the attempt in June, 1777, to seize Washington in New York; the plan was changed later to an attempt to poison him. The plans of the conspirators were overheard by a woman, who disclosed them to the American authorities, and as a result the men implicated were captured and punished, one of them, Private Thomas Hickey, of Washington's bodyguard, being hanged.

After Arnold's treason and his flight to the British the Americans made an attempt to seize him. The undertaking was like Gen. Funston's exploit. Sergeant Champe of Lee's legion, was the principal actor in the scheme. His plan was known only to the chief in command; so when he deserted to the British his late comrades fired upon him and he reached the enemy's lines under a fire of bullets, narrowly escaping with his life. This was an excellent introduction to the British and Champe was received with open arms. But he was unsuccessful; Arnold moved his headquarters the day on which Champe had arranged to capture him, and Champe had finally to desert from the English and return, again under fire, to our lines. When Washington wished soon after to promote him for his gallantry he found that Champe had died of disease.

The capture of the British general, Prescott, in July, 1877, was perhaps the first successful attempt of the kind. Gen. Prescott commanded the British forces in Newport, R. I., and went for the summer to a fine house some five miles out of the city. Col. William Barton, knowing this, determined to capture him, if possible, and on July 10, 1777, with forty-one comrades, rowed across from Warwick Point, on the west shore of Narragansett bay, and reached the house undiscovered. The door of the house was burst in by a negro, who used his head as a battering ram; Prescott was asleep and awoke to find himself a prisoner. He was not allowed to dress, but in his cloak, with a captor carrying his clothes, was forced to the boat and taken within the American lines and then to Washington's headquarters in New Jersey. He was exchanged later.

The successful capture of Gen. Stoughton by Mosby and his rangers in March, 1863, was the result of a carefully made plan. Mosby, with twenty-nine men, entered Fairfax court house, passing themselves off as belonging to the Fifth New York cavalry, and while some of the band attempted to capture Col. Wyndham, the leader went to the house where the general was sound asleep. At the name of Mosby Gen. Stoughton sat up in bed, wide awake in an instant. "Have you got him?" he asked. "He's got you," replied Mosby. The prisoner was taken to Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's headquarters.

Russia and Manchuria

Why the Former Deems the Possession of the Latter Essential.

No other European power holds the relations to Manchuria, now, apparently, the storm center of the east, that Russia does. She has an Asian empire twice the size of the United States, with no good port. The whole pressure of this vast teritory forces her inevitably toward the open sea, and the open sea she can reach by no other way than by driving a wedge through the dominions of her neighbor, Manchuria. There is a certain poetical justice in this which no other European power can claim with regard to the far east, says The American Monthly. For the ancestors of the same Manchurians and their neighbors, the Mongols, for centuries harried and devastated the whole of Russia, burning Moscow and leaving the whole country in ruins. They carried away numberless Russian women captive, so that there is a large admixture of Russian blood in the veins of these Asiatics. The Russians may, therefore, claim that their present position in Manchuria is merely just reprisal, and that the pressure they are exerting or may exert on Manchuria is a trifle light as air when compared to the dire desolation wrought by the Mongols on medieval Russia—a desolation which has left a permanent tinge of gloom and sadness on the spirit, the thought, and the art of the Russian race. Russia absolutely requires an outlet to her Asian dominions, and in forcing this outlet she is only repaying a tithe of the oppression inflicted formerly on herself, when she stood as the bulwark of Europe against the Mongols.

Where She Was Vaccinated.

It was just after a dinner, and the man who had been sitting next to the young woman with the beautiful arms and neck thought that he was the most fortunate individual in the room. He said all the bright things he could bring to mind and was congratulating himself that he was keeping up his end of the conversation fairly well when the young woman began to display signs of nervousness. She gazed around the room as if looking for an avenue of escape, moved uneasily in her seat, and allowed two or three jokes to pass by her without making it evident that she recognized them. Astonished and half alarmed, the man looked at her inquiringly, and meeting his look she said: "I am in misery." "In misery?" echoed the man. "Yes," she replied. "I was vaccinated the other day and it has taken beautifully. I could almost scream it hurts so." The man looked at the beautiful arms, and, seeing no marks there, said: "Why, where were you vaccinated?" "In New York," she replied, with a smile.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

TO GROW SILK WORMS.

Congress to Be Asked for Funds to Provide for a New Industry.

For the purpose of making experiments in the raising of silkworms and the production of raw silk, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson proposes to ask Congress for an appropriation of $10,000. If successful in this endeavor and if his experiments turn out well, it is his hope to establish in the United States an industry which will keep within our borders a considerable portion of the $45,000,000 which is annually paid to foreign producers for raw silk. It is the belief of the promoter of the scheme that the south will prove a most fertile field for silk "farmers" and that eventually the industry will be conducted there and in the west on extensive lines. The science of raising silkworms is most interesting. The silkworm is the larva of a moth and may be regarded as truly domesticated showing no desire to escape from confinement if kept supplied with food. The eggs of the silkworm are nearly spherical and about the size of turnip seeds. Each female produces on an average from 300 to 400 of them, about 20,000 making an ounce in weight. The eggs, when about to hatch, are spread out on clean paper thinly, and over them are laid small pieces of ordinary mosquito netting, over which are scattered a few finely-cut mulberry leaves. The new-born worms at once pass through the meshes of the net in search of food, and the whole can be easily removed to the place where they are to pass the first stage of their existence. When at length the worms begin to lose appetite and throw out silk, it is time for the grower to construct little arches of twigs between the shelves for the spinning of the cocoons. When this has been done the worms promptly mount into the branches and begin to spin. Care has to be taken to prevent any two or three of them from making a double or treble cocoon, which would be unfit for weaving.

Insulting the Speaker.

"The worst insult I ever got," remarked an F street real estate man to a party of friends the other evening, "was hurled into me by a Baltimore chum of mine last week. I went over to Baltimore to attend a meeting and dinner of real estate men. A few of us who were invited to attend the affair were asked in our letters of invitation to prepare a few remarks on various subjects, and the subject that was dished out to me to handle was the financial question. I burned the midnight gas for three nights in preparing my discourse on the nation's finances, and when I got through with it I had a sneaking feeling within me that it was about good enough to put Secretary Gage, J. Pierpont Morgan and all the rest of the writers on finance all to the bad by comparison. Well, I read the thing at the meeting and seemed to make a ten-strike with it until my Baltimore chum, in the midst of the applause got up in his place, clapped his hands enthusiastically, and yelled: 'Author! Author!'" —Washington Post.

Longest Stairway in Washington.

Statesmen reach the reception room in the white house by climbing the longest stairway in Washington. Senator Hanna, suffering from what baseball men call a "charley horse leg," was laboriously mounting the steps recently and stopped to rest when halfway up. He saw the chief usher on the floor above and called to him: "Have an elevator put in this building during the summer and send the bill to me." "Second the motion," said Senator Platt, when he heard of Hanna's offer.—Chicago Chronicle.

Egyptian Cigarettes.

Some idea of the great demand for Egyptian cigarettes can be gained from the fact that one factory in Cairo turns out 2,000,000 cigarettes a day. These are principally sold throughout European countries.

The state board of control is an institution that happily escaped wrecking at the hands of the fusionists by not coming into existence in time to suffer at their hands. It was somewhat remarkable that such a departure could be accomplished at the first attempt to place the state institutions under the control of one central body until Gov. Van Sant and Auditor Dunn recommended it to the legislature. It is safe to say that 95 per cent of the people of the state favored the plan, and the legislature adopted it substantially without opposition. It was to be expected and was really inevitable, that there should be some friction when the machinery of such a vast system come to be set in motion, and naturally many matters of detail were overlooked in the enactment, but on the whole the plan is working out to the satisfaction of everybody and the next legislature will correct any errors or omissions that may now occassion inconvenience to the board. Enough has already been done to show that the board will accomplish an enormous saving in the expense of maintaining the state institutions, and by making them strictly state, rather than local in their character, will secure great advantages in the management. One thing the board is doing most sedulously, and that is to carefully avoid partisanship and nepotism in the selection of employes. The politics of employes may remain a perfect secret, and no relative of any member can secure employment in any capacity under the board.

NOW UNITED.

THE TWO SCHOOL DISTRICTS IN THIS CITY JOINED.

The school election Saturday evening proved that a large majority of the people were in favor of uniting the two school districts of this city and forming an independent district. There was no opposition to the union in district 107, there being 103 votes cast in this district, all of which were in favor of the new district. In district 57, which is composed of the Third ward, a warm contest was anticipated, as a number of the residents in that portion of the city had expressed their intention of defeating the union, but they were unsuccessful, and 70 of the votes were recorded in favor of uniting, while there were but 35 against it.

The new district comprises all of the city of Thief River Falls and about one-half of the township of North, having an assessed valuation of nearly $400,000.

A new board of six members will be elected Wednesday, June 19th, the voting place being at the city hall. Several have been mentioned for members of the new board, among them being Horace Bagley, C. E. Winslow, C. L. Dobner, A. B. Helgeson, F. J. Stebbins, James Meehan, C. C. Jackson, Carl Kretzschmar, C. J. Knox, Ira C. Richardson, Dr. Tupper, F. H. Kratka and C. A. Robbecke. Thief River Falls has plenty of good material for a school board, and it is the duty of all the people to turn out and see that good members are selected.

MOSQUITO PEST CURE.

Consul at Maracaibo Says the Castor Plant Will Drive Them Away.

Consul Plumacher, at Maracaibo, has written to the state department at Washington giving a remedy against mosquitoes. He says:

"It consists in planting the castor oil plant (Ricinus communis, or Palma Christi) around the house and premises. In cold and temperate climates the castor oil plant grows to a height of four or five feet. In these countries it becomes a tall tree and is perennial. It seems that the smell of the plant is disagreeable to mosquitoes and other insects, and it is an acknowledged fact that where these plants grow few mosquitoes are found. My personal experience bears this out.

"My residence is surrounded by plantain and banana trees, and I have been much troubled in the past by the great number of mosquitoes which gathered between the leaves. Following the example of old settlers in the country, I planted the castor seeds, which grew up in profusion, and there are now no mosquitoes to be found among the plantain and banana trees, although I keep the ground well irrigated. By keeping branches and the seeds of the plant in rooms the mosquitoes are driven away from the latter."

Irish Lacemaking.

After the famine of 1847 lacemaking was revived in Ireland. Limerick, the most successful Irish lace, is not really a lace at all. It is tambour work upon net and muslin.

The Irish point, so called, is the ancient cut work, being made in quite the same way.

Net was first made by machinery in 1768. The machine was an adaptation of the stocking loom to lacemaking and was cumbrous and not very effective. In 1809 John Heathcote, a farmer's son, evolved from consciousness and experience the first machine to make true bobbinet with perfect six sided holes. It brought a great hue and cry about his ears from laceworkers, who fancied they saw themselves thus reduced to beggary.

The Luddites broke into the factory where the machines were first set up and made scrap iron and kindling wood of them. The only result was to drive the new manufacture to other and safer quarters. For long the secret of the machine's construction was most jealously guarded by English manufacturers. Not satisfied with letters patent they kept up a coast patrol to make sure that nobody took model or drawings to France.

At last, though, they were outwitted. A discharged workman who had the plan of it in his mind managed to get safe over sea and build a machine in France.

Sort of a Cannibal.

An old farmer for many years got his dinner on market days at a small hotel kept by a widow.

She had long suspected that he ate more than the price (1s. 6d.) warranted, so she determined to test him. She accordingly arranged matters so that there was no room for him at table, but she took him into a private room the table of which was graced by a steaming leg of mutton. He set to in good earnest, and soon nothing was left but the bones.

Highly delighted with his cheap feed, on passing the bar he tendered 2 shillings for his dinner and a quart of ale. The widow declined to take any payment on the ground of having inconvenienced him so much.

Chuckling to himself, the farmer lifted down his market basket from a hook, and, finding it rather light, he tore off the covering and shouted:

"Here, Mrs. Brown, where's my leg o' mutton?"

"Why, ye old silly," said the widow, "ye have ate your leg for your dinner!" —London Answers.

The Torture of a Flax Shirt.

The most trying ordeal that Booker T. Washington was forced to endure as a slave boy was the wearing of a flax shirt. In his autobiography, "Up From Slavery," he says:

"In the portion of Virginia where I lived it was common to use flax as part of the clothing for slaves. That part of the flax from which our clothing was made was largely the refuse, which of course was the cheapest and roughest part. I can scarcely imagine any torture except perhaps the pulling of a tooth that is equal to that caused by pulling on a new flax shirt for the first time. It is almost equal to the feeling that one would experience if he had a dozen or more chestnut burs or a hundred small pin points in contact with the flesh. Even to this day I can recall accurately the tortures that I underwent when pulling on one of these garments. The fact that my flesh was soft and tender added to the pain. But I had no choice. I had to wear the flax shirt or none, and had it been left to me to choose I should have chosen to wear no covering.

"In connection with the flax shirt my brother John, who is several years older than I am, performed one of the most generous acts that I ever heard of one slave relative doing for another. On several occasions when I was being forced to wear a new flax shirt he generously agreed to put it on in my stead and wear it for several days till it was 'broken in.' Until I had grown to be quite a youth this single garment was all that I wore."

The Resin Eaters.

"Resin eating," said a south Georgia doctor, "is a habit acquired by the Cracker settlers who live in the neighborhood of a turpentine still. The resin they use isn't the hard, shiny resin of commerce, but has been dipped out of the cooking caldron at an early stage of the process, and when it cools it can be kneaded between the fingers like wax. The backwoods resin eater will bite off an immense chunk and chew it placidly until it disappears. The heat of the mouth keeps it fairly soft, but if the chewing becomes too deliberate it is apt to 'set,' as they say, and cement the victim's jaws together in a grip of iron.

"On one occasion a big, rawboned backwoodsman who used to hang around a still I operated came rushing into my little office, clutching his face in both hands and making a horrible gurgling noise in his throat. 'What on earth is the matter?' I asked in alarm. 'His rosum's sot,' said another Cracker, who brought up the rear. I was nonplused at first, but finally grasped the fact that the man had been chewing a monstrous slab of resin and had thoughtlessly suspended operations long enough to allow it to solidify and clamp his teeth like a vice. We finally pried his mouth open with a chisel and broke a couple of molars in the operation. Next day I saw him chewing again."—Exchange.

The White Shark.

The shark of sharks, the real "man eater" and the one most dreaded, is the white shark. This variety reaches a length of 35 feet and a weight of 2,000 pounds. Its head is long and flat, and the snout far overhangs the mouth. Its six rows of teeth are sharp as lancets and notched like saws. Its mouth is very large, so that one has been known to cut a man's body completely in two at a single snap of its cruel jaws and another to swallow one at a gulp. Near Calcutta one of these sharks was seen to swallow a bullock's head, horns and all.

From the stomach of another a bull's hide was taken entire, and the sailor who made the discovery insisted that the bull had been swallowed whole and all except the hide had been digested. From the stomach of another was taken a lady's workbox, filled with the usual contents, scissors and all. It is commonly the white shark which follows the vessel at sea day after day and week after week.

Laughter.

Laughter is a positive sweetness of life; but, like good coffee, it should be well cleared of deleterious substance before use. Ill will and malice and the desire to wound are worse than chicory. Between a laugh and a giggle there is the width of the horizons. I could sit all day and listen to the hearty and heartsome ha, ha, of a lot of bright and jolly people, but would rather be shot than be forced to stay within earshot of a couple of silly gossips. Cultivate that part of your nature that is quick to see the mirthful side of things, so you shall be enabled to shed many of life's troubles, as the plumage of the bird sheds the rain. But discourage all tendencies to seek your amusement at the expense of another's feelings or in aught that is impure. It was Goethe who said, "Tell me what a man laughs at and I will read you his character."

The First Millionaire.

Who was the first millionaire? Solomon? But come down to earth in modern times. Solomon's wealth was fiction, like that of Crœsus, Midas and the rest. Perhaps you remember Pope's lines—

When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend
The wretch who, living, saved a candle end.

John Hopkins was generally known as "Vulture" Hopkins from his rapacious method of acquiring money. He was the architect of his own fortune, dying worth $1,500,000 in 1732.—New York Press.

Willing to Hear of It.

A Methodist critic, wishing to put his bishop "in a hole," or, as Dr. William Everett would say, "to deposit him in a cavity," asked in open meeting whether or not the bishop came to the conference in a Pullman car.

"Yes," the bishop cheerfully replied. "Do you know any easier way?"—Boston Christian Register.

Prompt Justice.

In the "History of Beverly," Mass., the following anecdote is related of a good justice of the peace in the old colonial times. On a cold night in winter a traveler called at his house for lodging. The ready hospitality of the justice was about being displayed, when the traveler unluckily uttered a word which his host considered profane.

Upon this he informed his guest that he was a magistrate, pointed out the nature of the offense and explained the necessity of its being expiated by sitting an hour in the stocks.

Remonstrance was unavailing, for custom at that time allowed the magistrate to convict and punish at once, and in this case he acted as accuser, witness, jury, judge and sheriff, all in one.

Cold as it was our worthy justice, aided by his son, conducted the traveler to the place of punishment, an open place near the meeting house where the stocks were placed. Here the traveler was confined in the usual manner, the benevolent executor of the law remaining with him to beguile the time of its tedium by edifying conversation.

At the expiration of the hour he was reconducted to the house and hospitably entertained till the next morning, when the traveler departed with, let us hope, a determination to consider his words more carefully before giving them utterance in the hearing of a conscientious magistrate.

The Professor's Wooing.

The experience known as "popping the question" is the bugbear of every man, however confident of his charms or fluent of speech. Many original ways of asking young women to marry them have been resorted to by bashful men, but perhaps the most brilliant suggestion came to a learned German professor, who, having remained a bachelor till middle life at last tumbled head over ears in love with a little flaxen haired maiden many years his junior.

One day, after vainly endeavoring to screw his courage to the sticking point, the learned man came upon his Gretchen as she sat alone, darning a stocking, with a huge pile of the family hosiery on the table. The professor aimlessly talked on general topics, wondering how he could lead up to the subject nearest his heart, when all at once a happy thought came to him.

Leaning forward, he put his big hand on the little fist doubled up inside the stocking and said hesitatingly:

"You darn very beautifully, fraulein. Would you like to darn my stockings only?"

Fortunately the fraulein was not so simple as she appeared. She grasped the significance of the question immediately and lost no time in answering. "Yes."—Youth's Companion.

Why Girls Cannot Throw.

A great deal of fun is poked at girls because they cannot throw a stone or a snowball and hit the person or thing they are aiming at. The general idea as to why girls cannot throw as well as boys is that they have not acquired the knack by practice as their brothers have. Another explanation is given by a medical man which tends to show that girls could never learn the knack, however much they tried.

When a boy throws a stone, he crooks his elbow and reaches back with his forearm, and in the act of throwing he works every joint from shoulder to wrist. The girl throws with her whole arm rigid, whereas the boy's arm is relaxed.

The reason of this difference is one of anatomy. The feminine collar bone is longer and is set lower than in the case of a male. The long, crooked, awkward bone interferes with the free use of the arm. This is the reason that girls cannot throw well.

Such Stuff as Dreams Are Made Of.

The materials of dreams may be enumerated as memories of waking sensations, memories of waking thoughts and new sensations received in sleep, whether from without or within. Dr. Gregory mentions of himself that having on one occasion gone to bed with a bottle of hot water at his feet he dreamed of walking up the crater of Mount Etna and feeling the ground warm under him. He had at an early period of his life visited Mount Vesuvius and actually felt a strong sensation of warmth in his feet when walking up the side of the crater, and he had more recently read Brydone's description of Mount Etna.

On another occasion, having thrown off the bedclothes in his sleep, he dreamed of spending a winter at Hudson's bay and of suffering distress from the intense frost. He had been reading a few days before a very particular account of the state of the colonies during winter.—Cassell's Magazine.

Fish and the Alphabet.

Perhaps the funniest thing to be told respecting the antiquity of fishing relates to the holy wars which were waged in ancient Egypt over the finny denizens of the water, the conflicts arising from the circumstance that, as often happened, one tribe would insist with the utmost irreverence upon eating up the fishes which the inhabitants of an adjoining territory held in divine adoration.

The child of today, in learning his alphabet, calls the letters by their names simply because the ancient Phœnicians were pleased to make similar figures the symbols of certain sounds, and it is thought very likely that the Phœnicians have been driven to invent that alphabet by the necessity of corresponding with peoples of various tongues incidentally to the great commerce which grew out of the fishery.

The letter "p" is like a selfish friend, the first in pity, but the last in help.—Chicago News.

The Song of the Grouse.

Certain birds when the period of courtship comes round repair to particular trysting places and announce their presence there by well known calls or signals.

The ruffed grouse, as every one knows, seeks an old log or other convenient perch and drums with his wings, a hint to any lady grouse within hearing that "Barkis is willin."

The performance of the grouse is one frequently heard, but comparatively seldom seen, and for many years there were numerous conflicting theories concerning the means by which the drumming was produced. Some said that the sound was vocal, and others declared that the grouse struck the log with its wings. Even today the precise cause of the sound is not known, for, although the bird has been closely watched, its wing movements are so rapid that it is next to impossible to tell exactly what takes place. This much, however, is known: During the performance the grouse stands upon the log or other perch and strikes the air in front of his body somewhat after the manner of an elated barnyard cock. The first few strokes are measured, but they become faster and faster until the individual thumps are lost, as in the rolling of a drum. Whether the sound is due entirely to beating of the air or whether it is increased by the striking together of the wing tips is a question yet to be settled.—Hartford Times.

Why Dinah Wept.

Not long ago a lieutenant in the navy was ordered away on a three years' cruise. The order had been dreaded for weeks, and when it came the young wife, who was to be left in a Brooklyn flat with a baby and a colored servant, was in despair.

She controlled her sorrow very well, however, until the actual moment of parting came, and then she wept as though her heart would break. The cruiser was to leave the navy yard early next morning, and the lieutenant had gone to report for duty.

In the midst of her lamentations the young wife heard a sniffing and sobbing in the dining room, and upon glancing through the door she saw Dinah, the colored maid, rocking her body to and fro in a chair and weeping violently.

"Why, D-D-Dinah, what's the m-matter?" cried the mistress. "You seem to t-t-take Mr. Blank's departure as much to heart as I d-do."

"'Deed I doesn't, Mis' Blank; 'deed I doesn't!" sobbed Dinah. "What am bolerin dis chile am de fac' dat a cullud genman friend o' mine am gwine sail hisse'f on dat same ole cruisah!"—New York Herald.

Some Exploded Food Fallacies.

Fish as a food of the brain worker must be consigned to the limbo of vanities, though certain forms of fish are the cheapest of all foods, notably the bloater. Oysters and turtle soup are frauds. It would take 14 oysters to equal the nourishment of one egg and 223 to provide the same amount of nutriment contained in a pound of beef.

Salt fish, especially salt fat fish, is the most valuable food for the poorer classes, and whole races in the south of Europe live on the Newfoundland cod. Canned salmon, we sat at 18 pence a pound is no more expensive than cod at sixpence. Millions of people live on it, and the North American settler who is not well provided with cash finds it a good substitute and change from flesh meat at times.

Frogs' legs are not of high nutritive value, which need not surprise us. Turtle soup from the chemist's point of view is not worth a tenth of the price paid for it.—Exchange.

Too Classic For Them.

A resident in a small suburban town had a visit from a German friend who knew little English, but played the violin well. One of this resident's neighbors gave a "musicale," and of course he and his visitor were invited. The German took his violin, and when his turn came he played one of his best pieces from one of the great masters.

When he had finished, there was an awkward silence and no applause. The people were still looking expectantly at the German, who looked disappointed and flustered. The silence grew painful.

Finally the hostess, quite red in the face, edged over to the side of the German's friend.

"Can't you get him to?" she whispered.

"What do you mean?"

"Why, now that he's got tuned up, isn't he going to play something?"—London Tit-Bits.

His Late Hours.

"You never think of staying out late," said the convivial and ill bred person.

"Sometimes I think of it," answered Mr. Meekton distantly.

"But you don't care for that sort of thing."

"Not in the least."

"Perhaps you never had any experience?"

"Oh, yes, I have. It was only last night that I was out at half past 2 a. m. Henrietta sent me out to see if I couldn't keep the back gate from slamming."—Washington Star.

A Telltale Boast.

Nell—She used to boast that she was one of the charter members of the Woman's Suffrage club. She doesn't appear to be as proud of it now.

Belle—Oh, she's just as proud, but you know, the club was organized 15 years ago, and she must have been at least 20 when she joined.—Philadelphia Record.

State of Minnesota, } SS.
County of Red Lake }

Whereas, at a session of the board of County commissioners of the County of Red Lake State of Minnesota, held July 21st, 1900 a petition signed by Laurent Gagner and others land owners, whose lands were liable to be affected by, or assessed for, the expense of the construction of the work proposed therein, praying for the establishment and construction of a public drainage ditch along a route described therein, accompanied by a bond duly approved, as provided by law, was filed with the County Auditor of said County; and it appearing by proper evidence to the satisfaction of said Board of County Commissioners that at least thirty (30) days' notice has been given of the pendency of said petition and of the time at which the same would be heard, as by law provided, whereupon the said Board did, at its session on the 21st day of July A. D. 1900 proceed to hear and determine said petition: and said Board having determined that the construction of such ditch would be of public benefit and utility, and conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare, we did accept said petition, and thereupon did appoint as viewers of said proposed work, three (3) resident freeholders of said Red Lake County who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and are not of kin to any of the parties interested therein, and directed them to meet preparatory to commencing their duties as such viewers, at the terminus of said ditch in said County, at 1 o'clock, P.M. on the 24th, day of September 1900; and certified copies of the said petition and order of said board appointing them as said viewers was issued to and served upon said viewers, as by law provided, as will more fully appear from the certificate of service of Charles Sampson as Sheriff of said County, now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said county, they proceeded, at the time set in said order, with a surveyor who is a civil engineer, and made an accurate survey of the line of said drainage ditch from its source to its outlet, and did cause stakes to be placed along said line at each 100 feet, as numbered progressing down stream from its source, and made and filed a report thereof; and reported that said drainage ditch would be of public utility; and in their said report made the necessary computations and assessments, description of location, the land through which the same would pass, the names of the owners, and the damages or allowances thereto, the expense attending such work, and all estimates, as required by law, duly sworn to as by law required.

And the Auditor of said Red Lake County did, after the filing of said report, cause a notice to be given, to be published, posted and mailed, as by law provided, of the pendency of said petition and of the time and place set for the hearing thereof:

And Whereas, said Board of County Commissioners of said County of Red Lake having met in session at the time set for the hearing of said petition, to-wit, the 7th day of January 1901 and adjourned to the 8th day of January 1901 and then proceeded to hear the same, and having found that the report of said viewers is made according to the provisions of law, and that the proposed drainage ditch to be of public utility, and conducive to public health, or of public benefit and convenience, and, from the evidence before them, that the estimated benefits of said work was greater than its total cost, including damages awarded, said board of county commissioners did then locate and establish the said drainage ditch according to the report of said viewers appointed and acting as aforesaid; which said report, together with the plats and exhibits accompanying the same was then made a part of the Resolution establishing said ditch. And the said Board of County Commissioners having from said viewers' report and the evidence before determined upon the benefits to be assessed and the damages to be awarded to the several tracts of lands as appears from the records of the proceedings of said Board had on said 8th day of January 1901.

And having accepted as true and correct the itemized statement and report of said viewers, which statement and report is on file and of record in the office of the County Auditor of said county, which said statement shows that the total sum of all expenses incurred or to be incurred in locating, constructing and establishing said ditch to be $7846.46, which sum is hereby declared to be necessary for the construction of said ditch.

Now, Therefore, It is hereby resolved by the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County Minn., that bonds of said county in the agregate sum of $8,000 be issued and negotiated for the purpose of raising necessary funds for defraying the expense of establishing and construction of said ditch, said bonds to be issued and dated the 15th day of May 1901 to bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, payable annually to be 8 in number and to be in denominations of $1,000 each, to mature on the 15th day of May 1911. Principal and interest payable at the National Bank of Commerce in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Each of said bonds to contain a recital to the effect that they are issued in accordance with the provisions and pursuant to chapter 97 of the laws of Minnesota for the year 1887, and acts amendatory thereto:

CHAPTER XXV—(Continued.)

Angry and outraged, she turned away. But as the man's impertinence again recurred to her, it brought a new and startling thought.

She paused and looked back. The two men together were entering the lodge.

Pshaw! Tyrrell was drunk; his words held only a drunkard's meaning!

A new sense of emptiness and desolation stole over her, as she slowly ascended the stairs and went into the house.

The long hours of the day wore away. Occasionally the sound of voices and laughter floated upward to her own room, where she sat, with closed doors.

Not even Cora came to her. The child seemed changed—alike to love and dread her. She had mailed her letter to Bertie, but he had neither come nor sent response. Oh, God! if he should be dead—if she should never see him more!

All that had happened to her the previous night appeared a dream. Love had brought her only misery. It could but bring her misery to the end, unless—unless Bertie should return free to claim her. Words of love from any other lips were words, indeed, to her indeed, empty and meaningless.

But hope was growing gray. It had so little, so little to rest upon. Every day they had searched throughout the rooms she had seen in her dreams to find some hidden place where the papers, of such moment to her, might be found, and every day she had met fresh disappointment.

Last night she had made one more attempt and that had been vain like the rest.

She pushed back the hair from her heated brow, as these thoughts came trooping through her brain. The solitude of her room appeared peopled with phantoms of the past.

"I shall go mad—verily I shall go mad, unless relief comes soon," she thought, and, rising, wearily, hastened from the room, as if to hasten away from herself.

The library was deserted when she entered it and passed on into the little music room. The twilight was slowly falling, and the evening shades were about her.

She stood before the desk where she had stood the evening previous; but now there was neither eagerness nor hope.

She made no effort to discover any secret hiding place. What need? All effort had been made, and all proved futile, indeed.

Suddenly, beneath one of the brass knobs, she saw something moving. She looked more closely. It was a small spider weaving its web. She watched him with a smile upon her lips.

"So he weaves his web," she thought. "Will you, too, spider, find your victim?"

As though in answer to her words, a poor, little frozen fly, which thus far had escaped the winter's frost, came fluttering near.

It stumbled into the web. With the swiftness of thought the wary, hungry waiter and watcher had drawn the almost invisible threads about the helpless, fluttering wings and bound it fast.

Closer and closer he drew, to gloat upon his coming feast, when Beatrice, hitherto fascinated by the strange comparison she had drawn, broke the spell.

"One helpless thing, at least, shall find a friend," she murmured aloud; and, shuddering as she did so, she snapped the slender cords which yet had bound like steel the frail wings, released the little prisoner and brushed the spider to the floor, where she might crush it beneath her little foot.

But though his prey was lost, his life was spared. Already Beatrice had forgotten him, for, with the gesture that had hurled him to the floor, the brass knob on which had been woven his web, moved.

She pressed it further. It flew back. The blood surged madly to her brain. With a low sob of intense and overpowering feeling she fell upon her knees.

At that instant Randolph Chester entered the room.

CHAPTER XXVI.

He paused, amazed and wondering, on the threshold. He had heard the cry, he had seen the gesture. He had caught, too, a momentary glimpse of the wonderful light irradiating her face. What had happened What could have happened?

"Beatrice!" he exclaimed, and advanced quickly to her side.

But she had been swift, too, to recognize that he, too, stood upon the brink of her discovery, and, springing up, she leaned with her back against the desk, her hands behind her, striving to find and press back the secret drawer.

At last she touched it. It closed with a slight click.

"What was that?" he asked. "Stand aside, Beatrice; something is wrong!"

Silently she obeyed him; but the desk would tell no tales now.

There was no aperture in the solid wood, no crack or crevice which would indicate its secret. Yet, instinctively, she felt distrust.

"What were you doing here?" he asked again.

"You care to know?" she murmured. "Look, then!" and she pointed to the tiny fly fluttering on the ledge of the desk, some remnants of the web still clinging to its frail, exhausted wings. "I was comparing myself to this poor, little insect," she continued. "It was in the cruel spider's toils, like myself, and I set it free, wondering what hand would so do unto me."

"No hand can free you save my own!" he replied in a low voice, bending close to her ear. "If you indeed insist upon so odious a comparison, let us follow it; but you are in a web from which the world is powerless to rescue you, except at my will, which hinges upon yours. Beatrice, my patience is not exhaustless. Take care!"

She only answered by a cold look of scorn. She dared not further trust her voice.

His words were scarcely heard or heeded as she strove to realize all that her discovery might mean.

She had seen only that the drawer held papers—papers which might prove worthless—which prove of value greater to her than the wealth of all the gold mines in the world.

She was not sufficient actress to wholly conceal the emotion the new-born hope inspired.

A flush of the old days was on her cheek, a light of the past in her eyes, and the jealous eyes watching her saw and were troubled.

"I've half a mind to turn the desk into firewood!" he said, moodily, as the sound he had heard when the drawer closed again recurred to him. "I always hated the ugly thing!"

A startled look of sudden fear came into the beautiful face.

But at that moment came a welcome interruption in a voice from the open doorway.

"Don't carry our your threat, Mr. Chester," said Mr. Grant, advancing into the room. "That is one of the handsomest antiques I have ever seen. If you are serious in wishing to dispose of it, let me become its purchaser."

"If you are serious in admiring it, let me present it to you, rather."

"You would not give this desk away, Mr. Chester?" interrupted Beatrice, in quick alarm. "It was papa's. If you do not like it here, let me have it for my room."

"On no account, dear Beatrice," he answered. "Already you brood too much over the past, without surrounding you with old objects to feed your morbid fancy. Indeed, I have about made up my mind to furnish Grey Oaks quite anew—not to leave a stick of timber of the old stuff in the house."

"But this desk—give me this? Mr. Grant will, I am sure, resign the gift to me?"

"I would, with pleasure, Miss Markham," he replied; "but I am inclined to believe that Mr. Chester is right, and that old memories are hurtful to you. Still, I leave the decision to him, and shall be wholly satisfied whichever way it turns."

"The desk, my dear Grant, is yours. Give me your address, and it shall be shipped early in the morning."

In the morning! There was yet the night to act—to think! Oh, what should she do? How gain possession of the papers? Whom could she trust? To rebel further against its being sent away might arouse suspicion, and suspicion now, at any cost, she must allay!

How strangely—how heartlessly, too, this stranger acted? One would have supposed he would have generously refused the gift when he had learned that old associations had endeared it to her. Were all the world alike?

Oh, God—the papers! If she had had but time to catch them from their hiding place—to conceal them within her bosom—she might have defied them all! Time! there must yet be time! Before the morning dawned they should be here!

"You must come and inspect my purchases," said Mr. Grant. "We must dress the tree to-night. You will assist us, Miss Markham?"

"Thanks—no!" she answered, coldly. "My deep mourning precludes festivity."

"When they are busy will be my opportunity," she thought.

. . . .

"You do not like Miss Markham, Miss Lorrimer?" said Mr. Grant, abruptly, to his neighbor, as they assembled, a half-hour later, at the dinner table.

She turned quickly toward him, with a flush of annoyance on her cheek.

"Pardon me," he continued, "but I am something of a mind-reader, and I can not resist the temptation to try my power."

"She is insane. One does not give personal liking or dislike to the mad."

"You really believe in her insanity? I have seen no evidence of it. By the way, Mr. Layton appears to be greatly interested in her. Is there any relationship existing between them?"

"None!" she answered, coldly. "Why should you imagine it?"

But to herself she thought:

"So, even strangers notice his infatuation. How shall I end it? How shall I break the spell which binds him?"

Mr. Grant's thoughts, too, were busy, but they would have read only that he had discovered to Beatrice another enemy.

"You will come with us, Beatrice?" asked Cora, as they rose from the table.

"No, dear; I am going to my own room, Cora," she added. "You once did me a favor. Will you do me another to-night? Why do you grow so pale? Have they taught you to fear me?"

"No; but don't ask me to do anything, Beatrice! I would if I could, believe me, but he watches me so—"

"He watches you, and you fear him! Why, Cora? Oh, my dear little friend, don't let this cruel serpent fascinate you. He is so wicked, so cunning, and you suspect him so little! But you need not hesitate to grant me this favor to-night, Cora! It is very simple! At 9 o'clock I shall be in the music room. I wish a few moments—only a few moments—alone there. But they are essential to all my future! Just at that hour make any pretext—keep him near you. Pomise me this—swear it, Cora! If he watches you, he watches me, doubly, trebly! He makes his servants spies of every action. Unless you help me in this, in some way he will prevent me. Oh, Cora, don't refuse me!"

"I will try, Beatrice—indeed, indeed, I will try!" she answered, and impulsively threw her arms about the neck of her friend, half in love, half in contrition, and wholly in resolve to make amends for her former betrayal.

The music room was deserted when Beatrice, stealing softly toward it, as though she had come on the errand of a thief, heard from the drawing room, across the hall, the sound of gay voices and merry laughter.

"Why do you watch the clock so anxiously, Miss Cora?" asked Mr. Chester, as he sat a moment beside his little guest and fixed his dark eyes on the face which so suddenly paled beneath their glance. "Has Beatrice made you co-conspirator again? Ah, I see I have guessed rightly! But you need not fear; her every action to-night will be immediately known to me. I have lately had a horrible dread that her insanity might take the form of suicide, and I dare not leave her an instant to herself."

"Suicide?" repeated Cora, her very lips blanching as she remembered Beatrice's prayer to be alone for a few moments—only a few moments—in the music room.

The clock already was chiming 9. Perhaps it was too late to save her!

"Oh, go to her at once—at once, Mr. Chester! She is in the music room! Go—go quickly, or you may be too late!"

He rose with a quiet smile of triumph on his lips.

"I have not left the music room wholly deserted to-night, my dear Miss Cora—I had reason to believe my dear Beatrice might contemplate a visit there. Still, as you suggest, it would, perhaps, be better for me to be on the spot myself. The tree is progressing finely, is it not?" he added. "Pardon me for a few moments."

And, bowing, with his old, courteous grace, he gravely and quietly left the room.

But once in the hall, his expression changed, his step quickened.

"Tyrrell had strict orders to report to me the moment she crossed that threshold," he muttered to himself. "Why has he failed to do so?"

CHAPTER XXVII.

An hour earlier Tyrrell and the old man sat together before the open fire place in the comfortable living room of the lodge. As usual, a steaming jug was before them, from which one, at least, took copious draughts.

"You've got a nice place here," said the old man, after a little pause. "It's not many that's got a master like you, and not many that deserve it. "You're a good fellow, and I'll not soon forget the kindness you've done an old man like me."

"You don't owe me no thanks," replied the other, in a half-surly, half-drunken tone. "I didn't do it for the plaze ye, ye may be sure, bet bekaze I thought it'd plaze the young lady. Seems like I was mistaken, since she hasn't taken no notice of me since. Be jabers, what a pair of eyes she has in her head!"

"Is the young master sweet on her?"

"He's sweet on her money. He's no more heart than a turnip or a cabbage."

"But you lived in the old master's time?"

"Hush! Don't spake of him. It's his eyes she's got in her head; and every time she looks at me I think of the last time he looked at me, when she asked him to point out the thief! Gad! I wake up in the night, finding just those two eyes peering at me out from the darkness!"

And he took another drink, as though to rid himself of the fancy.

"But why need you care?" persisted the questioner. "You'd nothing to do with the taking of the money."

"Taking of the money?" he repeated. "Who said anything about the taking of the money? Hush your old mouth, or I'll turn you out in the cold. Yes, and I could do it, too! I'm master here! Yes, as good a master as him up in the fine house. He'd not dare do anything as Tyrrell said wasn't to be done!"

Under his shaggy eyebrows the old man's eyes gleamed.

"I was thinking you had a good berth," he said, quietly. "By the way, he sent you down some written orders for to-night, a while ago, didn't he?"

"Yes; but I haven't looked at them. I'd better look."

And he took from his pocket a paper he had crumpled as he hastily thrust it there.

"Be jabers, I can't see to read! It's all swimming. I belave I'm drunk again!"

"Let me try," said the other. "I'm not much of a scholar, and my eyesight's bad, but maybe I can make it out for you."

"Not much!" chuckled the lodgekeeper. "No knowing what that devil would write me. I'll take the first squint myself. But if he's ordering me out of this warm hole, I'm not thinking I'll be the man to obey."

As he spoke, he spread out the paper before him.

The old man rose and crossed the floor. Returning, he took a quick look at the page.

"Conceal yourself, while we are at dinner in the library, and summon me at once if any one enters the music room. Do not let there be one instant's delay."

"What are ye doing?" cried Tyrrell, endeavoring to sober himself, and screening, too late, the paper from the other's view.

"Trying to read your orders," said the old man, boldly; "but it won't do. My eyesight's not good enough for that distance."

"Maybe it's better than you let on," continued Tyrrell, suspiciously. "I've been told you were a suspicious character, anyway. I wonder if you are? If I thought you had anything to do with that young chap as used to come here swatehearting Miss Beatrice, it'd be the worse for ye. I owe him a grudge, and a bigger one than the master; but she likes him, and maybe some day—maybe some day—"

"Well, some day what?"

"Oh, I was getting soft-hearted! I'm often soft-hearted when in my cups. What was I saying? Well—never mind! What I meant to say was this, that some day I'd take my revenge on him. But I must be going. I'm late now for my orders—too late! I might as well stay here. Suppose you go for me, old man! It's not much you've got to do. Just go up to the house, and— Pshaw! I'm drunk! I'll go myself. Take care of the lodge until I return."

He rose and staggered from the room; but as he walked, with difficulty, another figure stole behind him in the shadow. The lodge had been left to take care of itself.

. . . . . .

She was alone! The library was empty. There was not a minute to be lost.

Poor Beatrice! Poor child! The little strength she had so carefully hoarded seemed in this awful moment to desert her. Her heart refused to beat but in slow, suffocating throbs, which compelled her to lean for support against the wall and gasp for breath.

There was no light in the music room, and the gas in the library was low; but she no longer needed light for her search. The darkness was more favorable to her purpose. Almost she could fancy her father stood beside her to guide and support her. Her dream had become reality, and invested the moment with singular and almost superstitious import.

"God help me!" she murmured, and moved noiselessly and swiftly across the floor, until her outstretched hands met the solid substance of the desk.

Again she fell on her knees beside it, groping with her trembling fingers to find the tiny brass knob, whose secret so strange a circumstance had revealed to her.

At last they touched—they pressed it. Merciful heaven! It refused to move! Had the events of the afternoon but shaped themselves into another dream, more dim, more indistinct, than the first?

No, no! Her brain was clear enough, her senses had not deceived her. She could almost again hear the click of the spring as the drawer slid back to its place.

To her distorted fancy it now seemed the bolt which, springing in its socket, shut forever the door of hope and happiness against her.

Again, and yet again, she strove to move the knob. It would not stir!

"Oh, God, send me some help!" she prayed, silently.

But in her throat there rose a quivering sob, and in the lonely darkness she hid her pale, agonized face in her hands.

A sound startled her—a sound quite near—almost as if some one were beside her in the darkened room.

Was it fancy?—or had heaven sent a spirit to her aid?

One more effort she must make.

Again she felt her way to the knob.

Merciful God! It moved!

"I am saved! I am saved!" she cried, in the intensity of relief, as the drawer slowly moved forward and her fingers closed upon its contents.

In her excitement and agitation she had previously pressed the knob situated directly beneath the secret hiding place, but heaven had directed her efforts aright.

She sprang to her feet, and pressed the papers fervently to her lips.

"It remains now, Bertie, only to prove your innocence!" she said, aloud: "and these," clasping the precious papers to her heart, "give me the power. Thank God! Thank God!"

But even as she uttered her thanksgiving, some one stole behind her in the darkness; some one's arm was thrown roughly about her waist—a hot, reeking breath burned her cheek—and the papers were torn from her trembling grasp.

She uttered one faint scream.

It was answered by the sound of hurrying footsteps.

The light in the library streamed to its full height, but it revealed to Randolph Chester, as he hastened forward, only Beatrice, as she stood, pale, gasping and leaning for support against the fated desk.

Close behind him followed William Grant.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Child, what has happened?" cried Chester.

Beatrice cast one searching look about the room, to be sure that it held no other save herself and the two men who had just entered it.

"Courage—courage!" she whispered to herself, with pale, trembling lips.

Then she took one step forward. She believed that she saw before her the man who had just robbed her.

How could anyone else have escaped from the room?

"Give them back to me!" she cried, in a voice trembling with passion. "Give them back to me, Randolph Chester! You no longer have a child to deal with, but a woman, whose wrongs have rendered her desperate. Thief! Give back to me the papers which you just have stolen!"

It was now Chester's turn to blanch.

"The papers!" he repeated after her, in a dull, mechanical voice.

"The papers!" she cried, her own voice losing its sweetness and growing nearly shrill as some of the torture of her agonized suspense thus found its vent. "As you are a man, as you are human, give them back to me—the papers which prove you a villain, coward, thief!"

Randolph Chester fastened his gaze upon her. A sudden wonder seized him to know if this girl, indeed, were playing, in very truth, the role he had assumed for her.

Had trouble driven her mad, or was there some mystery fatal to himself and his own hopes, underlying her words?

He strode forward and seized her slender wrists in a grip of iron.

"Control yourself!" he said, sternly, "and let me hear no more such epithets as you have just applied to me. Take care! Another scene so violent as this, and I will lock you in a madhouse!"

He no longer pleaded; he threatened.

Maddened, desperate, she wrenched herself from his grasp and fell on her knees beside Mr. Grant, who had stood back, pale and silent.

"Help me! For God's sake, help! Take me from this house! I care not where I go, so that I may not be near him. Do you not see that I am in his power, and that he is not man, but devil? Oh, God, he is driving me to madness!"

And she fell prostrate at his feet.

Chester strode forward, as if to lift her, but Mr. Grant waved him back.

"She is excited!" he said. "You can do no good just now. Even a stranger, like myself, would be less hurtful to her."

Teddy slept in a big bed with his mother, and one winter night, being right in the middle of it when his mother's bedtime came, she suggested to him to move on his side. He blinked at her, rebelliously. "No, I t'ink I won't move; it's cold everywhere I ain't."—Harper's Bazar.

WON PHYSICIAN'S HEART.

Miss Honora Patton Will Marry Dr. W. D. Gross in Pennsylvania.

Miss Honora Patton of Curwensville this state, was taken ill about a year ago while studying in Paris, says the Philadelphia Times. This circumstance gave rise to her acquaintance with Dr. William D. Gross, an American physician practicing in the French capital. As a culmination of a pretty romance comes the announcement that the young couple are to be united in marriage. Miss Patton has been in Philadelphia the last few weeks making final arrangements for the wedding, which will take place at Curwensville, and awaiting the arrival of Dr. Gross. The wedding will be one of the most elaborate affairs ever arranged in that part of the state within years. Music for the occasion is to be furnished by the Pittsburg Orchestra and a Philadelphia florist has been engaged to decorate the grounds and home. The ceremony will take place in June. Miss Patton is a tall, stately brunette, and since her debut in society some years ago she has been much sought after and admired. She is accomplished and talented in many ways. While at Wellesley College she obtained high honors. After graduating Miss Patton made a tour of the world, and later settled in Paris in order to complete her musical education and study the language. Being devoted to her work, Miss Patton entered little into the gaieties of society, and as a consequence of too confining study her health broke down in February of last year. For many months she was under the constant medical attention of Dr. Gross, and during that time the personal charms of Miss Patton so fascinated the American physician that some months later they became engaged. After a complete recovery Miss Patton returned to this country, and a formal announcement of her engagement was made. Dr. Gross is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and is recognized as the leading American physician in Paris.

GAUGING TIDES IN CANADA

Accurate Survey of Those in Lower St. Lawrence Completed.

The Canadian Marine department has just completed an important survey of the tides and currents of the St. Lawrence River, says a Montreal dispatch to the New York Sun. The survey is based on extended observations, taken during a whole season of navigation, throughout the St. Lawrence estuary from Quebec to Point de Monts, a distance of 300 miles. Tidal instruments of the latest self-recording type were placed at eight different points throughout this region and a continuous record was secured day and night of the form, height and time of the tides. This method largely made up for the shortness of the season as it secured the information in the most complete form. The record was also simultaneous throughout the region, in which the tide increases in height from five feet at the mouth of the estuary to eighteen feet at Quebec. The changes in the tide can thus be easily followed and its rate of progress and other data required for practical purposes can be correctly ascertained. The work of the Canadian tidal survey is now being extended to the Pacific coast and this year tide tables based upon direct observation will be issued for Victoria, B. C., and the Gulf of Georgia. These are the only tide tables issued for the Pacific coast between Astoria and Port Townsend in Washington to the south and Sitka in Alaska. Steps are being taken to bring other western ports into relation with these tide tables.

Building Churches in Chicago.

There is an unprecedented activity in the building of churches in Chicago, at the present time, and, in spite of the labor difficulties which extended far into the fall of last year, twenty-one churches have been built since then or are still building. Among the buildings in course of construction or already finished, are some rather pretentious structures of brick and stone, costing from $25,000 to $75,000. One-third of the number are Roman Catholic churches, and the rest are almost evenly divided among the Methodist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist, Evangelical and Jewish denominations.

A man expects rounds of applause when he begins to climb the lader of fame.

GONE BEFORE.

"It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call.
They throng the silence of the breast
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

"'Tis hard to take the burden up
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown;
But oh! 'tis good to think of them
When we are troubled sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more!

"More homelike seems the vast unknown
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard;
Wherever they may fare;
They cannot be where God is not—
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, Thy love abides—
Our God forevermore."

Millions for Baseball.

A million of dollars are spent every year upon the game of baseball, but large as this sum is, it cannot begin to equal the amount spent by people in search of health. There is a sure method of obtaining strength, and it is not a costly one. We urge those who have spent much and lost hope to try Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It strengthens the stomach, makes digestion easy and natural, and cures dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness and weak kidneys.

BLUEBEARD IN PETTICOATS.

French Woman's Eight Husbands Have Strangely Disappeared — Where Have They Gone?

A female Bluebeard has just eluded the French police, taking away all the records of her numerous marriages and her clever suppression of her husbands.

Dissatisfied with her maiden name of Jeanne Volante, she has borne successively the names of eight men whom she wedded.

Recently the mysterious disappearance of the husband of the jolly, buxom hostess of the small inn at Clichy caused the people of that place to wonder, especially when, three months later, she married a lad of eighteen years, who had been a boarder, without getting a divorce. The authorities, when notified of the case, went to arrest them, but the couple got word of it and escaped.

Certain papers found showed that the little woman had been married eight times in eight different towns, but had never been divorced.

The disappearance of her husbands had never been explained, but suspicion had never been aroused before. Now, if the police succeed in discovering the woman innkeeper, it is thought that an astounding series of crimes will be unfolded.—Paris Cable to New York Sun.

A Blacksmith's Strange Experience.

Goodland, Kan., June 1.—N. E. Albertson, our leading blacksmith, has been a great sufferer from rheumatism. He was so bad that he could not sleep for the great pain in his arms and shoulders. He had been afflicted for years, but lately he was so much worse that he thought he would have to give up his shop altogether.

Then a strange thing happened. A friend of his recommended a new medicine called Dodd's Kidney Pills, said to be a cure for Rheumatism. He commenced to use them, and at once began to recover. His pain has left him, and he is a well man to-day, and entirely free form any symptom of Rheumatism.

To say that he is thankful, is putting it very mildly. He is delighted.

Dodd's Kidney Pills deserve credit for having cured this very severe and almost hopeless case.

From recent reports, there does not seem to be anything they will not cure, as very bad cases of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy, Rheumatism, and Heart trouble, have been cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills, even after having been given up by our best doctors.

She Was Willing.

"And do you really and truly love me?" asked Miss Frocks.

"I love you madly!" replied Clarence T. Bainbridge. "I'll die for you!"

"If I only could believe that?" mused the maiden. "And if I could induce you to insure your life in my favor first."

But she hesitated to mention the matter to him, and he went away dejected.—Harper's Bazar.

SPORT IN WESTERN CANADA.

While the Farmer's Grain Is Ripening and His Stock Growing Fat He May Have Plenty of Shooting.

There is probably no country on the American Continent where the life of the farmer carries with it that assurance of comfort and success as does Western Canada. Nor is there to be found anywhere else such a pleasant combination. Game abounds everywhere and nowhere does it afford such perfect amusement. A noted sportsman writing of the favorite pastime says: "There is one particular spot where I saw a man drop seventy mallards one morning and bring them all to bag, too, for they dropped in open water or on flat prairie. At the right season of the year you can see black lines and triangles cut sharply out against the sky all round you, moving very swiftly, and you begin to wonder whether you have enough cartridges to hold out. You can hear the prairie chicken crowing like barn-door fowls, and a little to the northeast is a bit of marshy ground, cattle-poached and dappled with gleaming pools, where the snipe are nearly as thick as mosquitoes. A thin column of blue smoke curling up in the distance shows you where a few wandering Indians have pitched their camp, but there is no other indication of civilization in sight. Still, the neighborhood is well-settled, and a short drive will bring you to a farmhouse, where you can buy the finest butter and the freshest eggs for uncivilized prices.

A very short railway journey will bring you to a country full of deer and the lordly wapiti, the king of the deer tribe the world over, and down on the flat, boggy land by the lake shores the moose will stand knee deep in water on the summer evenings ready to lie down when the flies get bothering. All day you breathe the wild free air of the prairie, and at night you are lulled to sleep by the surge and ripple and splash of the waves on the beach, broken now and then by the wierd banshee-cry of strange water-fowl." Particulars regarding settlement of the lands of Western Canada can be had from any agent of the Canadian government, whose advertisement appears elsewhere in your columns.

Lord, when beneath the trees we go,
Where all Thy sweet wild wood-folk grow,
The buds and boughs seem praying low,
"Remember, Lord, and love us.

"By every leaf that springs to birth
To share our plenty, bear our dearth,
Remember, Thou wast born on earth;
Remember, Lord, and love us.

"By every night, when skies are deep,
And solemn stars above us sweep,
Think on Thy nights of earthly sleep;
Remember, Lord, and love us.

"By every dawning, fresh and dear,
Where choiring birds sing round us clear,
Think on Thy mortal wakings here—
Remember, Lord, and love us.

"By suns that shine with cruel stress,
By winds that vex us and oppress,
Remember Thine own weariness;
Remember, Lord, and love us.

"By springtime days when joy is rife,
By winter nights of storm and strife,
Remember Thou hast lived earth's life,
Remember, Lord, and love us.

"By all our slow decaying saith
Of doom drawn nearer with each breath,
Think how Thy life went down to death;
Remember, Lord, and love us."

So we have heard their pray steal through
The morning sun, the evening dew—
Wilt Thou not hear us praying, too?
Remember, Lord, and love us.

Won on the Field.

BY HON. W. H. HINRICHSEN.

"Where are you going, Sylvia?" said Mrs. Martin, as her daughter, accompanied by Mr. Amos Darling, a tall, elegantly dressed, young man, strolled out of the gate of the ranch house on to the open prairie.

"We are going for a little walk," was the reply.

"I want to speak to you before you go," said Mrs. Martin.

Sylvia returned a few steps to meet her mother.

"Sylvia," said the elder lady, "I see Tom Ruggles coming across the prairie. Don't leave the house."

"I saw him, too," replied Sylvia. "That's why I am going."

"Sylvia."

"Yes. I am tired of seeing him hang around," and she rejoined her escort.

Mrs. Martin called after them, "Don't go too far, you know the cattle have been ugly lately."

"Very well," answered Sylvia without turning her head.

Mrs. Martin stood at the gate and watched their retreating forms till they passed over the swell of the prairie.

"Good evening, Mrs. Martin," said a hearty voice, and she turned to greet a handsome young man dressed in cow boy costume.

"Why, how do you do, Tom. Won't you come in?"

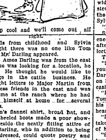
"Is Sylvia at home?" he asked as he swung from his saddle to the ground.

"She and Mr. Darling went for a walk a while ago. They will be back soon, I hope."

"Which way did they go?" asked he anxiously.

"Over the swell toward the slough," she answered. "But what is the matter?" for Tom sprung in to the saddle and his horse was already flying across the prairie.

Sylvia was the daughter of Major Martin, proprietor of the great Martin ranch, and Tom was the son of Colonel Ruggles of the great Ruggles' ranch, a few miles distant. They had been friends from childhood and Sylvia thought there was no one like Tom until Mr. Darling appeared.



"Keep cool and we'll come out all right."

Mr. Amos Darling was from the east and he was looking for a location, he said. He thought he would like to engage in the cattle business. He brought letters to Major Martin from business friends in the east and was welcome at the ranch where he had made himself at home for several weeks.

Tom's flannel shirt, broad hat, and high heeled boots made a poor showing beside the neatly fitting attire of Mr. Darling, who in addition to being well dressed, could quote poetry and tell stories of European travel. So, in the language of the prairie, Tom "got the sack" when he called at the Martin ranch, and Darling was the "whole thing" with Sylvia.

Even if Tom was miserable, Sylvia was quite happy, and that September afternoon as she and Mr. Darling strolled across the prairie, she felt happier than usual, for her escort had shown a decided inclination to ask a certain question.

"What is that noise?" said Mr. Darling, breaking upon a recitation in which he was indulging.

They stopped.

"The cattle," gasped Sylvia. "Look." And coming toward them, a mile or more away, was a line of long horns stretching in each direction almost to the horizon.

Mr. Darling's knees shook. He had heard the stories of the viciousness of Texas cattle in a stampede and he realized their danger. He looked around. Not a tree or fence in sight.

"We are lost," said Sylvia. "We cannot get away."

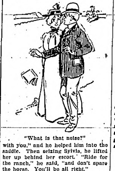
"Let's run," quavered Mr. Darling.

"They would soon overtake us," sobbed Sylvia. "We cannot escape."

A shout ringing across the prairie from behind them caused them to turn. A horse urged to its greatest speed was coming down the swell toward them. "Tom," screamed Sylvia. "Come," and she ran to meet him, followed by her companion.

Tom reined in his horse and flung himself from the saddle.

"Quick," said he to Darling. "Up with you," and he helped him into the saddle. Then seizing Sylvia, he lifted her up behind her escort. "Ride for the ranch," he said, "and don't spare the horse. You'll be all right."



"What is that noise?"

"But you, Tom?" screamed Sylvia.

"Never mind me," was the reply, and giving the horse a cut with his whip he started the animal with his double burden bounding across the prairie. Only for a short distance, however, for Sylvia, reaching around her companion, seized the reins and bringing the horse almost to a standstill, slipped to the ground.

"I'll not leave Tom," she cried.

Mr. Darling hesitated for an instant, then loosening the reins, the horse tore across the prairie like mad.

Tom drew his revolver and took aim at his rival but he did not fire. After an instant's hesitation he returned his weapon to his belt and said to Sylvia, who had run up to him.

"Keep cool and we'll come clear."

Their position was a dangerous one but Tom knew his business. They were in a sort of valley between two vast swells of the prairie. At the bottom of this valley ran a "slough," a wide boggy strip of land showing occasional pools of water, but made up mainly of stiff, wiry mud, several feet deep, interspersed with tussocks of bunch grass. They were but twenty paces from this slough, and coming toward them on the other side of it was the vast drove of cattle thundering down the hill with a tread that shook the earth.

"Stand behind me," yelled Tom in Sylvia's ear as he took his stand facing the slough and the approaching herd. She obeyed him.

The first line of animals rushed into the slough. Of these but few succeeded in crossing. They sunk to their bodies in the mud. Those behind, urged on by the weight of the herd, tumbled over them in every direction. Soon the slough was bridged by their sinking bodies and the first animal succeeded in getting across almost opposite Tom and Sylvia. Tom's pistol cracked and the animal rolled over, dead. Another and another till the six barrels of his revolver had piled up a barricade of six struggling steers in front of them. Five seconds fitted the empty cylinder with cartridges, and getting closer to the barricade, Tom continued his deadly work.

A dozen dead or dying steers were now piled up in front of them, and the herd, dividing at this point, passed by on either side.

Tom continued shooting at intervals and the gap in which they stood grew wider and wider. Finally the last steer passed by and disappeared over the swell and Tom turned to look at Sylvia.

"We are safe now," he said simply.

Sylvia had been very much frightened at first, but she was a prairie girl after all and was now as cool and collected as Tom.

They started to walk to the ranch.

"Say, Tom," said Sylvia, "how did you come to give up your horse to Mr. Darling? If you had just taken me on behind you, we could have escaped easily."

"He would have been killed," said Tom. "I thought you loved him and his death would have broken your heart."

"Love that dude. What can you take me for? You are worth a million of him."

"Sylvia," said Tom, "what made you jump off the horse?"

"Because," said Sylvia, "I preferred to die with you rather than live with anyone else."

Then the cowboys coming from the ranch to look for their dead bodies saw Tom take Sylvia in his arms and cover her face with kisses, in spite of its coating of dust.

Mr. Darling did not remain to the wedding at the Martin ranch. He concluded that he would not like the cattle business.

MISS LUCY ANNIE HEISER, OF MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Miss Lucy Annie Heiser, a graduated nurse of nine years' experience, trained and graduated from the Homeopathic Hospital of Minneapolis, Minn., writes as follows:

Albert Lea, Minn., Nov. 8, 1899.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio:

Gentlemen—"Although my school does not believe in patent medicines, I have found it to be a fact that Peruna is a grand and valuable medicine. I have known it to cure Mrs. Sampson, suffering with an inflamed womb, aggravated by malaria, after the doctors had failed to help her. Another of my former patients suffered with a complication of female diseases; she was so thin, nothing but skin and bones, but Peruna cured her and she is to-day in good health and good flesh. Facts prove that Peruna revives lost strength and restores to the sick that most wonderful blessing of life—health.

Lucy Annie Heiser.

If all the tired women and all the nervous women, and all the women that needed a tonic would read and heed the words of these fair ladies who have spoken right to the point, how many invalids would be prevented and how many wretched lives be made happy.

Peruna restores health in a normal way.

Peruna puts right all the mucous membranes of the body, and in this way restores the functions of every organ.

From Mrs. Amanda Shumaker, who has charge of the Grammar Department of the Public Schools of Columbia City, Wash., also Past Grand of Independent Order of Good Templars, Dr. Hartman received the following letter:

Columbia City, Wash.

"I can speak only good words of the repeated benefits I have had from the use of Peruna.

"Too constant application to work last winter caused me to have severe head and backache and dragging pains. I could not stop my work, neither was I fit to go on. Reading of the beneficial results from the use of Peruna I purchased a bottle and within a few days after using it, began to feel better.

"I constantly improved and before the seventh bottle was completely used, all pains were gone, my strength was restored, and I now seem ten years' younger.

"If I got tired or feel bad, Peruna at once helps me, and I feel you deserve praise for placing such a conscientious medicine before a suffering public."

Mrs. Amanda Shumaker.

Mattie B. Curtis, Secretary Legion of Loyal Women, Hotel Salem, Boston, Mass., writes:

Mattie B. Curtis.

"I suffered for over a year with general weakness and debility, manifested especially in severe backache and headache.

"My physician prescribed different medicines, none of which seemed to help me any until a club associate advised me to try Peruna as it cured her of constitutional headache and stomach troubles. I at once ordered a bottle and before it was used, felt greatly improved.

"I have taken four bottles and for two months have been entirely free from these maladies. Several of my friends are using Peruna with beneficial results, especially in cases of troubles with the kidneys and other pelvic organs, together with weaknesses peculiar to women."

Peruna is a specific for the catarrhal derangements of women.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Dyspepsia

Most people eat more than is good for them. The stomach tries to digest all that's put into it, but if repeatedly overloaded, it goes on a strike. That's indigestion. Rich, over-sweet, indigestible food weakens the stomach and makes it unable to take care of the material put into it. More food taken into a weakened stomach than the stomach can digest, stays there, forms gases and rots, bringing on all the horrors of dyspepsia. The only way to cure dyspepsia is to clean out the digestive canal with CASCARETS. Keep it clean with Cascarets, eat light food sparingly, and give the stomach a chance to rest up and get strong again.

Be sure you get the genuine CARCARETS!

NORTHERN PACIFIC INTERESTS REACH AN AGREEMENT.

End of the Most Remarkable Financial Battle in the History of Wall Street—Details of the Agreement Not Made Public—Composition of the Northern Pacific Board Left in the Hands of J. P. Morgan—Complete and Perfect Harmony Will Result Under the New Plan.

New York, June 2. — The conflicting interests in the Northern Pacific railroad have reached a final amicable agreement upon all matters of disagreement and their future relations to the property. There has been no announcement of the terms of the new pact, which ends the most remarkable financial battle in the record of Wall street, and none of the details have been made public. Late yesterday afternoon the following statement went out on the ticker:

"It is officially announced that an understanding has been reached between Northern Pacific and Union Pacific interests under which the composition of the Northern Pacific board will be left in the hands of J. P. Morgan, certain names having already been suggested which will especially be recommended as representative of the common interests. It is asserted that complete and permanent harmony will result under the plan adopted between all interests involved."

When the statement was shown to Louis A. Heinsheimer, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., he said:

"The statement is authentic. We cannot go into particulars as to the settlement or give you any details at this time. All that we can say is that there has been a settlement of the differences that existed and the matter is at an end."

The Boers were finally repulsed, leaving fourteen dead on the field. The British loss, which was severe, is not stated. British newspapers, which usually support the government, continue to grumble because the British public is being kept in ignorance of the real facts of the war in South Africa. The Boers apear to be making steady progress in the south. In Cape Colony near Colesberg they are reported to have captured 500 horses.

SLAUGHTER OF STRIKERS.

Forty of Them Said to Have Been Killed by Russian Police.

London, June 2.—According to a dispatch received from St. Petersburg it appears that the conflict at Alexandrovsky, in the vicinity of St. Petersburg, between the strikers at the Obuchoff iron works and the authorities May 20, when about 3,500 rioters attacked the police, had much more serious results than was admitted in the police report of the affair issued May 21. It was then said that after twelve of the police had been injured they were reinforced by soldiers who fired three volleys, killing two men and wounding seven. The relatives of the strikers declare that forty of the men were killed and that 150 were wounded.

AS VIEWED BY TOWNE.

Porto Rican Decision Means That McKinley Will Again Be a Candidate.

New York, June 2. — "The supreme court decision in the Porto Rico cases means that an attempt will be made by the Republican party to elect President McKinley for a third term. It means an attempt to concrete imperialism with it for years."

This was the sentiment uttered by Former Senator Charles A. Towne of Minnesota at the Fifth Avenue hotel, where he is staying.

"I know," he continued, "that the proposition of running Mr. McKinley for a third term has been seriously considered by Republican politicians."

LOOMIS WILL NOT RETURN.

President Will Not Again Expose Him to Insult in Venezuela.

Washington, June 2.—It is officially admitted that Minister Loomis will not return to Venezuela. There are two reasons for this decision. In the first place Mr. Loomis has suffered in health at his uncongenial post, and in the second place the president is not disposed to expose him again to the merciless attacks he has suffered in Venezuela as a result of the execution of the orders of the state department. Mr. Loomis, who is now in Europe seeking to recuperate, will be given another diplomatic position as soon as a suitable place can be found. Meanwhile Mr. Russell will remain in charge of the United States legation at Caracas for a period of time not yet determined upon, but likely to be fixed by the attitude of the Venezuelan government.

Dr. James Nevans Hyde is given by the department as authority for the statement that Stewart has leprosy. FIVE MEN LYNCHED

SUSPECTED OF PETTY STEALING FOR SOME TIME.

Taken From the Guards and Hanged to a Bridge—Mob of About Fifty People Participate in the Lynching—Ropes Placed Around Their Necks and the Prisoners Dragged to the Bridge — One Prisoner Makes Stout Resistance and Is Hanged Before the Bridge Is Reached.

Biebler, Cal., June 2. — Details have been received here of the lynching of five men at Lookout, Modoc county, early yesterday morning. The lynched were Calvin Hall, 73 years of age, his three half-breed sons, Frank, James and Martin, aged respectively 26, 19 and 16, and B. D. Yantis, aged 27.

As reported here the men lynched had been suspected of petty stealing for some time. Last Saturday they were arrested for stealing barb wire, pieces of harness and some hay forks. A search warrant was issued and the hay forks found in the house of Hall and Yantis, who were taken into custody and brought to Lookout, where they were being held awaiting examination and trial. Sunday and several days following other searches were instituted and halters, dishes and table linen which had been taken from clothes lines were found hidden on the premises of the suspects. The charge against the elder Hall was petty larceny for stealing the forks, hence he was released on his own recognizance. His trial was to have taken place yesterday morning. The charges against the others was burglary and their examinations had been set for June 3. They as they were unable to furnish bail. Pending their examination they were being guarded in the Lookout hotel by Constable Carpenter, assisted by B. Nichols, J. W. Brown and S. Goyette. The two former stood guard till midnight and the two latter took their places after midnight. Calvin Hall was stopping at the hotel so as to be near his sons. Yesterday morning about 2 o'clock a mob, estimated at from thirty to fifty people, suddenly appeared at the hotel and pointing their guns at the two officers on guard, commanded them to remain silent while they secured the five prisoners, placed ropes around their necks and dragged them toward the bridge which crossed Pitt river. They compeled the two guards to accompany them. Frank Hall, it is reported, made such strong resistence that the mob hanged him before it got to the main bridge, under a small bridge crossing a deep slough. The others were taken to the main bridge and Calvin Hall, the father, was hanged on the north side and Yantis and the other Hall boys were hanged on the south side of the bridge. As soon as the lynching was discovered word was telegraphed to the district attorney and sheriff at Alturas, and they, together with the coroner, are now on the way to the scene of the tragedy to hold an inquest.

Were Held in Custody

MORSELS OF WIT & HUMOR

SENATOR VEST'S PET ANECDOTE.

From the St. Louis Republic: Senator Vest's most famous anecdote is that of Miss Bertie Allendale. It was told when the two chambers were arrayed against each other on the tariff of 1894 and the house was insisting that the country would go without any tariff act unless the senate were prepared to forego its own schedules and adopt those of the house.

"In my younger days out west," said Mr. Vest, "I went into a variety theater one night.

"It was one of those primitive shows where the stage manager comes before the footlights without a coat and waistcoat, and with his shirtsleeves rolled up to the elbows, to announce the next number on the program.

"'Miss Bertie Allendale,' remarked the stage manager, apearing in one of the interludes, 'who has entranced two hemispheres with her wonderful vocal powers, will now render, in her own inimitable style, that exquisite vocal selection entitled "Down in the Valley."'

"A gentleman in a red flannel shirt rose in the midst of the audience and exclaimed in an impressive bass voice: 'Oh, thunder! Miss Allendale can't sing for green apples.

"The manager, who had started to leave the stage, halted and turned. An ugly light flashed from the eye which swept the audience and finally rested on the face of the interrupter. Raising one shoulder higher than the other, letting one hand drift significantly toward his hip pocket, and thrusting his nether jaw forward in a savage way, he observed with a deliberateness which emphasized every syllable, 'Nevertheless and notwithstanding, Miss Bertie Allendale will sing "Down in the Valley."'

"And she did so. So, likewise, nevertheless and notwithstanding, the senate schedules will stand."

A SOULLESS COMMUNITY.

From the Boston Courier: A young clergyman, just arrived at the locality of his first call, met at the railway station a boyhood acquaintance whom he had not met since they were playmates together in a remote town. After a handshake and mutual expressions of pleasure at the unexpected meeting the newly found friend exclaimed:

"But, say! What on earth are you doing in this part of the world?"

"Me?" enthusiastically replied the ecclesiast, "I have come here to save souls."

"You have, eh?" was the response. "Well, let me tell you I've been long enough in this town to know that you've struck a sinecure."

SWEET CONCEIT.

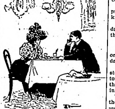
From the Denver Times: There was moonlight and the waters of the lake glimmered like molten diamonds. A thrush sang sleepily and from a boat rocking on the bosom of the placid waters came the faint tinkle of a guitar.

"What would you say," he cried in low, husky tones, leaning toward the dainty vision occupying the other end of the boat, "if I were to tell you that I think of you day and night and even dream of you?"

"Well," she replied, with a soft-atop gurgle, "I would say you were capable of most beautiful thoughts."

After that he rowed viciously.

THE WORST OF IT.



Bride (who had eloped)—"Here is a telegram from papa."

Bridegroom (anxiously) — "What does he say?"

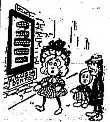
Bride—"All is forgiven, but don't come back."

LAUGH ON THE TEACHER.

From the Milwaukee Sentinel: It was at the Normal school that this happened, and the class laughed. It was a laugh on the teacher, too, but he didn't get angry, although it did break into the serious contemplation of serious studies with which he was trying to interest the students. It was in the study of psychology, and they were discussing what ideas first entered the human mind when certain words were spoken or written—whether the mind thought of one certain object designated by the word of the whole general class which is embodied in that word. To experiment on this mental phenomena, in order to bring it more clearly to the attention of the students, the professor said he would write a word on the board, and then let one of them tell instantly what impression was made upon her mind. He called upon one of the pupils to be ready to think quickly and tell exactly what her first thought was, after she saw the word which he was about to write. He stood close to the board, so that the word was hidden by his shoulders until he turned. He wrote the word "pig" and all of the class saw it except the girl who was standing ready to make reply. When he turned, he didn't get out of her way and she couldn't see the word. In reply to his sharp question:

"Now, what do you see?" she replied naively, "I see you." And the class laughed.

FEMININE AMENITIES.



Jealous Little Girl—"What, call that a spring hat? Why, the very signs on the walls are laughing at you!"

ARMS AND MEN.

From Detroit Journal: Once upon a time there lived two kings, by name Ethelstane and Ethelward.

Now both of these kings, simultaneously, as it chanced, dreamed of universal peace, and proposed as with one voice the disarmament of nations.

Hereupon each of the kings, Ethelstane equally with Ethelward, fell to felicitating himself upon having been the first to conceive of this excellent project.

"It is my idea!" quoth Ethelstane.

"Pardon me, it is my idea!" protested Ethelward.

At first the kings were courteous, though insistent, but presently their blood warmed, neither being at all given to yielding, until they were finally quite beside themselves with anger.

"We shall see whose idea it is!" thundered Ethelstane, placing himself at the head of his army and marching boldly into the domains of Ethelward.

"We shall indeed see!" roared Ethelward, gathering his forces to meet the invader.

During ten long years the war proceeded, with varying fortunes, until both kingdoms were devastated and depopulated. At last Ethelward fell by the sword of his foe.

"It was my idea!" exclaimed Ethelstane, not forgetting to fall on his knees and humbly thank the God of Battles.

This story of Ethelstane and Ethelward makes it very plain indeed that there are some things which cannot be settled save by an appeal to arms.

THEY WERE ALL TIRED.

From the New York Mail and Express: The parlor entertainer has some amusing experiences, although he is not always good natured enough to tell them against himself. One who appreciates a joke, however, relates that on a certain occasion he had been performing at an "at home," and responding to so many encores that the program became unusually long.

After it was over his hostess and her young daughter came up to him, and, after congratulating him on the success of the afternoon, said, most cordially:

"Oh, Mr. Blank, come and have some punch and sit down for a while. I know you must be awful tired."

"Yes," chimed in the sweet young daughter, with the best intentions in the world, "I'm sure we are."

THE LONGEST LINE.

From Answers: He was a jolly sailor lad and had come to spend a few days in his native city of York.

"Yes," he remarked proudly, as his steamship company was being referred to in complimentary terms, "ours is the longest line in the world, stretching as it does, from America to China."

There was a moment's silence and then the hostess—a hard-working Scot—chimed in:

"Weel, I dinna ken, if ye've cause tae bounce sae much, for does not my claes (clothes) line no' stretch frae pole to pole?"

BRITISH NEXT TO GO

WILL BEGIN EVACUATION OF CHINA EARLY NEXT MONTH.

Infantry Will Be the First to Leave, and After the Monsoons the Cavalry Will Go—Evacuation Will Be Complete Early in September—Extensive Preparations for the Return of the Court to Pekin Are Being Made—Chinese Discuss the Indemnity Question With the Ministers.

Pekin, June 11.—The British contemplate beginning their evacuation early in July. The first to leave will be the infantry, and after the monsoons the cavalry will go. The first troops will retire from the Tartar city, which will be left in possession of the Chinese troops. Gen. Barrow has informed Li Hung Chang that he can transfer the two British sections to the Chinese on July 1.

Li Hung Chang's deputies conferred yesterday with a committee of ministers regarding the payment of the indemnity. The Chinese suggested other sources of revenue than those proposed by the powers. The ministers have not decided which sources are to be used. Russia and France continue to advocate a loan under an international guarantee. Several countries, including Italy, object to China being allowed to pay 4 per cent on the indemnity, as their own rates of interest are higher than that. If the Russian proposition is accepted the rate of interest will be higher and the loan will be issued below par, which will mean a greater burden for China to carry. There is no inkling of what the final decision of the ministers will be. The emperor has issued stringent orders to the authorities along the border of Shensi and Chili to prevent Collisions With the French.

Extensive preparations are being made for the return of the court to Pekin by way of Northern Honan and then northward to the Belgian railway. There is nothing to show that the court has denied itself anything amid the sufferings from famine in Shensi. The Chinese express great satisfaction at the announcement of the intention of the court to return in September. All the foreign troops, with the exception of the legation guards, are expected to withdraw ere the middle of that month, the only troops now already under orders of withdrawal being the Japanese, whose government is sending reliefs. It is said, however, at the Japanese legation that when Japan is absolutely certain the other powers are evacuating her own troops can be withdrawn on two days' notice.

Li Hung Chang denies the report that the West Mongolia mission has been destroyed, but he acknowledges that the country is disturbed. The fate of the mission can only be learned later, when reports are received from authentic sources.

PLUNDER RECOVERED.

Thirteen Thousand Dollars Found by Detectives.

Mineral Point, Wis., June 11.—Thirteen thousand dollars more of the gold coin stolen from the First National bank on the morning of May 24 have been recovered. It was found in the earth vault of a commission house, about a block from the looted bank near the City hotel, at which the prisoner, Steve Jelliffe, boarded. It is believed that the detectives got information from the prisoner under the sweatbox methods. Detective Shipley of St. Louis went into the vault and dragged the treasure from its hiding place. The gold when found was in five bags, one containing $9,000 and the others $1,000 each. This find and the $8,000 before recovered comprises all the gold missing from the bank. The balance, $2,800, is in currency, and the detectives hope to recover it later.

FIVE MEN KILLED

CAR OF DYNAMITE BLOWS UP WITH TERRIBLE RESULTS.

Many Buildings Badly Damaged, and Besides the Killed Seven Are Seriously Injured — Explosion Caused by the Collision of a Freight With the Train Which Carried the Car of Dynamite—Shock of the Explosion Felt Ten Miles Away—Both Trains Completely Wrecked.

Binghamton, N. Y., June 11. — Five men were killed and seven injured by an explosion which occurred Saturday at Vestal, about ten miles from here. The explosion was caused by the blowing up of a car of dynamite. The shock of the explosion was distinctly felt in this city. Surrounding houses in Vestal were badly wrecked, and in Union, across the river, several buildings were badly damaged. All communication was cut off and special trains were sent to the scene of the wreck to render necessary assistance. All through the early morning hours the rescuers toiled about and among the burning freight cars at the scene of the explosion, but it was not until late in the afternoon that portions of the last dismembered body to be accounted for were discovered a quarter of a mile from where the explosion occurred, while tracks of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western were completely blocked until far past midday. Both trains were completely wrecked and the engines of the wild-cat freight which ran into the rear of Train No. 61 which was taking water at the time, and which carried the fatal car of dynamite, were reduced to scrap iron, pieces of which have been picked up a distance of half a mile away. Aside from the damage to railway property much minor damage is reported. Nearly every house in the villages of Vestal and Union, which is across the Susquehanna from the wreck, lost more or less of its window glass, while farmers' houses and barns near the scene were badly shattered. None of the inmates, however, were injured.

DR. DALY A SUICIDE.

Was Responsible for the "Embalmed Beef" Investigation.

Pittsburg, June 11.—Maj. W. H. Daly, surgeon general on the staff of Gen. Miles in Porto Rico, committed suicide at his home here yesterday by shooting himself in the right temple. The body of the doctor was found in the bathroom by Miss Mary Short, the housekeeper, lying in a pool of blood with a 38-caliber revolver lying on the floor. Dr. Foster, who was summoned at once, found the bullet hole in the temple and announced that death had taken place several hours before. Miss Short then remembered hearing a sharp report at about 7:30 a. m., but thought it was the quick closing of a window by some one. No cause is known for Daly's deed unless it be that insomnia drove him to temporary insanity. For some time past he has been unable to sleep regularly, and it is thought that after a sleepless night he concluded to end all. The doctor was a widower and leaves no immediate family. He was fifty-nine years old and for many years has been prominent in medical circles. He gained international prominence during the Cuban war, as it was his report to the commanding general of the army that started the "embalmed beef" investigation.

COURT AL FRESCO.

Unusual Scene Presented at a Murder Trial.

Galena, Mo., June 11. — An unusual scene is presented here at the preliminary hearing of Mrs. John Stallion, her father, James Crabtree, and his two sons, Frank and Charles Crabtree, for the murder of Alice Stallion, the woman's sixteen-year-old stepdaughter. The hearing is being held in a grove, the two justices sitting at a table under a tree and 2,000 people attracted from points for miles around forming a circle about the court and defendants. Notwithstanding no overt act has yet been attempted. Threats have been made against the Crabtrees by many of the strangers in town and the county officials are taking all precautions at their command to protect the prisoner. Galena is off the railroad, and the fact that the 2,000 people would care to come miles to attend the hearing is considered significant. It has been decided to exhume the body of the girl that it may be examined by the doctors to investigate a theory of the county prosecutor that a criminal assault was made upon her by one or both of the Crabtree boys and that they killed her to hide the crime.

DRUMMER FINDS A FORTUNE.

Packet of Letters Turn Out to Be Bonds and Stocks Worth $250,000.

Hartford, Conn., June 11. — William Warner, a drummer of New Haven, has just unearthed a fortune in a peculiar fashion. While rumaging through an old trunk, the property of a relative, he unearthed a packet of letters. Thinking them a bunch of sentimental effusions, the work of his father, Warner stuffed them into his grip and packed up his sample cases for a trip. While seated in the smoker he untied the package and great was his surprise on finding them bonds of an early issue of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, with great parcels of stock of both the Adams and United States Express companies. Arriving in Hartford Warner hastened to a brokerage firm, where he found he had some $48,000 of accrued interest coming to him, as well as property valued at $250,000.

MRS. McKINLEY MAY RECOVER.

Improvement Which Manifested Itself Last Week Continues.

Washington, June 11.—The slight improvement in Mrs. McKinley which manifested itself the latter part of the week continues and hope begins to be felt that she may after all recover from the present attack. The improvement, however, is so slight as not to change materially the extreme gravity of the case. The usual consultation of the physicians was held yesterday morning, and at its close the following bulletin was issued:

"Mrs. McKinley's physicians report that she passed a very comfortable night and continues to improve."

The fact that Mrs. McKinley has more than held her own and that no unfavorable turn has occurred is considered in every way encouraging, but as this result is due partly to the constant use of powerful medicines the physicians fear the effect of reducing the stimulants and likewise have to cope with the effect on her system by the constant administration of them as the only means of prolonging her life and making ultimate recovery at least a possibility. The stimulants and the complaint from which she suffered in California, which is now under b[illegible] control, however, weakens her pow[illegible] of resistance so that apprehension is ever present that a sinking spell may occur suddenly from which she cannot be rallied. The reports from the sick room up to a late hour last night were decidedly encouraging.

CROPS RUINED BY STORM.

Wheat on Four Hundred Farms Completely Destoyed.

Wichita, Kan., June 11. — A correspondent who arrived here last night from the scene of devastation in Kay county, Okla., says that the storm of Friday night ruined the wheat crop of 400 farms west and northwest of Blackwell. These farms are all in one body of territory. The farmers, who had purchased twine and harvest machinery, are asking the local dealers to take them back, and the dealers have referred the matter to the factories. The loss of crops will cause no distress as the farmers are in good condition financially, owing to a succession of good crops during the past five seasons.

BANDITS LOST THEIR NERVE.

Got Nothing for Holding Up Canadian Pacific Train.

Vancouver, B. C., June 11.—A special from Eholt, B. C., tells of a bold attempt at hold-up, three men stopping a Canadian Pacific mixed train on the upgrade near Summit camp. As the train swept around the curve on the approach to the camp three men suddenly appeared and signalled to stop. The train came to a standstill, but luckily there was a large crowd on the rear platform, and upon their approach the would-be bandits thought the odds were against them and disappeared.

BOERS WILL QUIT

GENERAL SURRENDER AT AN EARLY DATE.

Persistent Rumor Circulated at Durban—British Make Frequent Successful Night Attacks in Pursuit of Botha's Command—Number of Boers and Large Quantities of Stock Captured — Gen. Blood's Operations in the Eastern Transvaal Meet With Success.

Durban, June 11. — It is persistently rumored here that a general surrender of the Boers will take place at an early date.

Details of Bullock's column, which is operating in the eastern part of the Transvaal, show that during the past three weeks the British have made frequent successful night attacks in pursuit of Commandant General Botha's forces. They have captured a number of Boers, and also large quantities of stock. Quantities of foodstuffs have been destroyed. The efforts to discover the location of a Long Tom in possession of the Boers have been futile.

Gen. Blood's operations in the Eastern Transvaal have been eminently successful in keeping Gen. Botha's force in a comparatively small area. The bulk of Botha's command, with whom he is at present, is still south of the Delagoa Bay railway. There are now only 600 Boers north of the line. Gen. Blood has denuded the country of supplies.

FOR ASSAULT ON A CHILD.

Indiana Farmers' Desperate Attempt to Lynch a Miscreant.

Princeton, Ind., June 11. — Henry Reynolds, white, thirty years old, who was arrested in Mount Carmel, Ill., charged with assaulting Lida Case, the thirteen-year-old daughter of a prominent farmer near here, was lodged in jail here after narrowly escaping being lynched. Learning of his capture fifty infuriated men crossed the river, intending to lynch him. News of their coming caused the authorities at Mount Carmel to abruptly stop his preliminary hearing, and he was hurriedly sent to Princeton under guard of the sheriff and a posse. Extra precautions have been made to protect the prisoner from further attempts at lynching. Reynolds has confessed. The girl is in a serious condition.

SURRENDER OF CAILLES.

Filipino General With 1,600 Men Will Give Up the Fight.

Manila, June 11.—Gen. Cailles, the insurgent commander in the province of Laguna, has promised to surrender with 1,600 riflemen under terms which Senor Dancel, who has acted as intermediary, states have been modified and accepted by the authorities. It is not believed that Cailles has that many rifles in his command, however. Senor Dancel will visit Gen. Wade and attempt to arrange for the surrender of Cailles to Brig. Gen. Sumner at Pagsajan, Laguna province, within the next two weeks. Maj. Batson of the Filipino cavalry (Macabebes) derives great credit for the influence he exercised on Cailles to bring about this action.

PRECIPITATED A RIOT.

Attempt to Run a Street Car Through a Religious Procession.

Chicago, June 11.—An attempt to run a street car through a religious procession of Italians at Eighteenth and Clark streets yesterday precipitated a riot in which the windows of the car were smashed and one man was injured. A riot call to the Twenty-second police station brought a wagon load of officers who saved the motorman and conductor from bodily injury. Sticks and stones were hurled at the car until there was not a whole window left in it. The police restored order with great difficulty, the Italians being bent on getting at the car crew, but the counsel of the priests in the procession averted a more serious conflict.

THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS
By John W. Eastman.
THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN

Anton Dvorak, the Bohemian composer, has been made a member of the Austrian house of Lords.

Li Hung Chang probably would be willing to pay the indemnity himself if the empress dowager had not been so rude to him in the earlier stages of the game.

President Schwab of the steel trust will have the most luxurious private car in the country. That alone should sell several million dollars worth of the common stock.

Green and yellow chartreuse may no longer be manufactured in France if the bill against religious associations goes through, as the head of the organization of Carthusians, the monks of the Grande Chartreuse, is situated outside of France.

Detroit will soon celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of its founding by Cadillac. Eastern people are apt to forget that there is so old a city in the west. In the story of the settlement and progress of Detroit much is revealed of the history of "the northwest under three flags."

The latest Paris idea is to pave the streets with glass, and experiments are now being tried to that end. According to the Telegraph's correspondent, pure glass is used without admixture of cement, but subjected to a special treatment, called devitrifaction. The result is a hard, smooth substance, opaque, absolutely non-porus, absorbing no foreign matter, and thus retaining no dampness or unpleasant odors.

The varied character of the Manila population is shown by such items as these, taken at random from one issue of a local daily: "Sim Vinco, a Filipino, ran amuck on Calle Anda on Thursday night and attacked Lu Tang with a heavy scantling. Mandarin Chang Quing, son of Carlos Palanca, the Chinese millionaire of Manila, has been appointed ambassador to Mexico, and is expected by his father to visit Manila about April 1."

Ex-Empress Eugenie has given to the municipality of Paris the cradle of Prince Louis Napoleon, the only son of Napoleon III. and the Empress. Prince Louis was killed in the Zulu war in South Africa in 1879. The body of the cradle is made of rosewood and is decorated with enamels in antique silver and chiseled bronze. The frames are of silver. A statue holds the imperial crown, in gilt and bronze, over the pillow, which is of white satin embroidered in gold with the letter "N." The cradle was originally a gift from the municipality of Paris to Empress Eugenie.

Farmers of Wabash county, Indiana, are building good roads by co-operation and at much reduced cost. They have an agreement among themselves on road-building, each owner of land abutting on a highway to be improved pledging in work or cash $1.50 per acre within half a mile of the road. Payment may be made within three years, and the burden thus distributed is hardly felt. The work is done in dull seasons, and gravel roads have replaced the old mud highways over many miles of turnpike. On the completion of a road the task of maintaining it is assumed by the county authorities.

The general design for the naval arch, which is to be erected at the Battery, New York, has been approved by the trustees of the Naval Arch Association and the organization of the finance committee for the collection of the funds, with which to construct it will be effected at once. The design was prepared by Ernest Flagg. It is estimated that the arch, including the statuary, will cost $850,000, while the sea-wall, beacons and monuments will cost $300,000 more. In organizing the committee for the collection of the fund, every care is to be taken to make it as representative as possible, in order to give perfect confidence in the project.

The French military authorities, after protracted experiments, are said to be so far satisfied with the value of the motor car in war time, that they are making arrangements to acquire, if necessary, the whole of the auto-cars for military service in the event of the army entering the field. Notices are said to have been sent to owners of auto-cars, asking them if they are disposed to sell their vehicles to the government whenever the country should find itself threatened with war, and also requiring them to fix prices of the cars. The actual purchasing price will be decided upon by the military authorities when the vehicles are handed over after taking into account the depreciation they may have undergone in the meantime.

Recent experiments by railway officials in Berne with an automatic ticket machine, invented by a Swiss, have given entire satisfaction, says a Berne correspondent. The machine is similar to the ordinary automatic machines, but the glass cases contain the tickets on which are printed the names of the stations and the price of the ticket. By dropping in the right amount and pulling a handle the ticket is set free. The machinery is so well constructed that an insufficient sum or any base coins will not work the spring.

IS DEAD ONCE MORE

NOTORIOUS YU HSIEN AGAIN REPORTED EXECUTED.

Latest Report Says He Was Executed May 24—Most Notorious of All Anti-Foreign Officers Has Been Killed and Resuscitated at Least Half a Dozen Times—Personally Took Part in the Butchery of Many Missionaries—Viceroys Begin Work of Reform.

Pekin, June 8.—It is stated that Yu Hsien, the notorious governor of Shansi who took part personally in many massacres and whose head was demanded by the ministers, was executed at Tai Yuenfu May 24. Two other officers were beheaded at the same time.

Yu Hsien, who was the most notorious of all the anti-foreign Chinese officers, has been killed and resuscitated at least half a dozen times. He personally took part in the butchery of missionaries and converts in the province of which he was governor at the time of the Boxer uprising. The ministers insisted upon his execution, but the dowager empress refused at first to order it. The next report was that he had been beheaded. Then again it was stated that he had been allowed to commit suicide. On Feb. 26 it was denied that he had killed himself and the statement that he had been decapitated was repeated. At the beginning of April a Chinaman who arrived at Pekin from Shansi reported that Yu Hsien had not been killed and was still moving around the province.

The strong tendency toward reform has been manifested recently by the actions of various viceroys. It is the intention of Viceroys Liu Kun Yi and Chang Chih Tung to wait until the court starts to return to Pekin before presenting memorials in favor of reform. The reason for this is that these two viceroys are afraid that if they presented their suggestions before that time the reactionaries who surround the court might subvert their influence.

BOERS ARE ROUTED.

British Capture a Large Supply Train and Inflict Heavy Loss on the Enemy.

Pretoria, June 8. — Col. Wilson, with 240 of Kitchener's scouts, has surprised and routed 400 Boers belonging to Beyer's command, thirty-four miles west of Warm Baths. The Boers resisted stubbornly, but finally broke and fled, leaving thirty-seven dead, a hundred prisoners and all their wagons and supplies, including 3,000 cattle, in the hands of the British. The loss of the latter was three men killed and fifteen wounded. Beyer's main command arrived on the scene soon after the engagement, but failed in an attempt to recapture the supplies. Beyer was thus left practically without transport or supplies.

Morse, an inmate of a federal prison in Missouri, and to have the prisoner's sentence commuted from three years to eighteen months. Morse was convicted of using the mails to defraud the widow of the late Richard Bland. While under heavy bond pending a new trial he started to flee to South America and stopped off here to visit his wife. He attended divine service, heard Rev. Wilson preach and was converted. The first act of reformation was to surrender voluntarily to the federal authorities.

He found a number of minor matters awaiting his attention, but nothing of very serious concern. He has not yet taken up the report of the naval board upon the Santiago medals or of the board which reported on wireless telegraphy. He says the policy of gradually reducing the fleet in the Philippines will be carried on, although there has been no material development in the plan already announced on this subject.

AMERICANS HONORED.

Delegates of the New York Chamber of Commerce Tendered a Banquet.

London, June 7.—The banquet tendered by the London chamber of commerce to the delegates of the New York chamber at Grocers' hall last night was one of the handsomest affairs of the kind ever given in a city famed for lavish hospitality. No effort was spared to honor the American guests, but it must be confessed that the latter did not sustain the reputation America has for brilliant after-dinner speaking. Nor did the British speakers do much to relieve the tedium of four hours speaking. All the speeches, however, teemed with extreme friendliness and faith in the establishment of permanent friendly relations. All the speakers expressed the belief that Great Britain and the United States would rule the destinies of the world, and that their unwritten alliance would always work for peace and the benefit of mankind. Lord Brassey presided. On his right was Mr. Choate and on his left Lord Lansdowne. Morris K. Jessup, Andrew Carnegie, Cornelius N. Bliss, Lord Alverstone (lord chief justice of England), Mr. Griscom, George G. Ward, Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, Levi P. Morton, L. V. Atterbury (president of the associated chambers of commerce), and J. Pierpont Morgan were among those seated at the table of honor.

NAVAL CADET FIRED.

Found Guilty of Hazing and Dismissed From the Academy.

Washington, June 7.—Following the example set at West Point the superintendent of the naval academy has caused a cadet to be dismissed for hazing. In this case, however, that of Calvin Joy Cressey of the fourth class of California, the accused was tried by court-martial and regularly convicted. The details of the court-martial are not made public but it is understood that the dismissed cadet was discovered in the act of hazing a junior in his room by compelling him to stand on his head. It was suspected that the practice might spread rapidly,—so speedy and drastic action was had as a deterrant.

HIS FAME GROWING.

Svend Svendson's Paintings Attracting Increased Attention.

Svend Svendsen, long known to his countrymen, has won a high place in the wide world of art. His prgress is being closely watched by artists and art lovers, for he is indefatigable as a worker, and every new picture reveals some new trait of his talent. He is best known for his snow scenes, but he is a master of landscape painting, and his art is by no means limited to snow themes, which he handles with such skill that each picture is quite different from the other.

Recently Mr. Svendsen has hung in a well known Chicago gallery a painting which compels attention from all critics. It is only a commonplace dwelling house beside a dusty road. It is a moonlight scene and wholly lacks color; but the critics find a "tonality," as they call it, which they cannot understand, but which they admire very greatly.

Writing of Mr. Svendsen, James William Patterson, the art critic, says:

"Svendsen's snow pictures are popular because so true to fact, so brilliant in color and so poetical in story. It is the presentation of facts in a new dress, the reincarnation of things. This is the last lesson in art that the student and art lover learns. It is the hardest lesson to master. We all love imitations when young; artists and all. Only the ripe understanding of the artist can grasp this idea of a reincarnation, and the same with the connoisseur. But it is the true end of art, and thus becomes 'high art.' High art used to mean great great pictures of saints or warriors doing unheard-of things in an unheard-of way, like the strange artificiality of 'David's Rape of the Sabines.' Every one to his artificiality. David and his following thought theirs very grand. In these days 'high art' signifies a more subtle thing than that. It means the wonderful tone in Millet's 'Angelus' (which so few people comprehended), or the peculiar 'quality' in the tonality of Puvis de Chavannes, or the colorless color of Cazin, and that came to him as an inheritance from Pierre Corot.'

"Svendsen has reached out after this higher art in several of his recent exhibitions, and now he gives us more of it. May it be granted to us, and to him, that he have the courage, the persistency and enough of dollars to maintain his convictions.

"In asking myself, 'Whose art is this like?' I have found no answer except that it is like Svend Svendsen's; a rejuvenated Svendsen. No art can exist except as it have a forerunner. Even Claude Lorraine, the greatest originator in the history of landscape painting, based his newness upon that which went before. So Svendsen must have some progenitor, and possibly we find it in Corot first and Cazin more recently. There is a flavor of Cazin in it, but only mildly so. Nothing of Cazin's is like this, but only of the same family. If, possibly, some of that good family blood flows in Svendsen's artistic circulation, he need not be unhappy; nor we, either."

"Just as Good" as Rubber.

"This office is deluged with letters from American manufacturers in regard to a report emanating from Bergen, Norway, to the effect that a chemist of Copenhagen has discovered a process for manufacturing, out of asphalt, a material called 'solicum,' which serves as a substitute for rubber," reports Mr. Freeman, United States consul at Copenhagen. "No process has been patented or discovered in Denmark for manufacturing such a material out of asphalt. A chemist named C. A. R. Steenstrup has recently patented a process for making solicum from old rubber and oil. Its efficiency as a substitute for pure rubber has not yet been demonstrated."

DIDN'T LIKE SWEDES.

Tom McDonald Showed His Resentment and Learned Much.

the Swede," says the Kansas City Star. "The Teuton is a mystery to the Celt, and the latter resents the idea of a nationality which he cannot comprehend. Tom McDonald, the brawny Irish hospital guard, has long been disturbed in mind because of Dr. Nylund, the assistant city physician, who is a Swede. With true national instinct, McDonald concluded that the best thing to do about it was to whip his man. Also, true to his racial traits, he had no doubt that he could d it. Probably in his dreams, he saw the prostrate enemy felled by his strong right arm.

The corridor of the city hall basement furnishes an ample arena in which to pull off a fight. There the descendant of the Irish kings attacked the phlegmatic scion of the Vikings. Report says it was a great fight. The champion of Sweden was not so big as the representative of Erin, but when he got his Gustavus Adolphus and Charles XII. blood up, McDonald discovered that he had tackled the job of his life.

"Long and furiously the battle raged, and when it was over, Ireland, though still in the ring, was badly disfigured and much bewildered. Indeed, McDonald looked something like the remnant of the Austrian army after the Swedes had got through with it during the Thirty Years' War."

A Corner in "Tandstickor."

No new shares will be issued for the time being. The company will have offices in the free port of Copenhagen and in Hamburg and London.

Washington, June 5.—At the request of the interior department the secretary of war has instructed Gen. Merriam, commanding the department of Colorado, to employ as many of his troops as may be necessary to maintain order on the Kiowa Indian reservation in Oklahoma. This action is based on a dispatch from Col. Randlett, in charge of the Kiowa and Comanche agency, reporting that at least 1,000 intruders had settled in the Wichita mountains, which are within the Kiowa lands soon to be opened to settlement, and that they claimed the right to do so under the United States mineral laws. At 11 o'clock she was resting comfortably. UNDER THE MILITARY

WILL CIVIL GOVERNMENT BE SET UP IN THE PHILIPPINES.

First of Next Month Will See the New Plan Established and It Will Be a Civil Government Exercised Through the Military Powers of of the President — Cabinet Discusses the Question in All of Its Phases—Original Plan Will Be Carried Out—No Extra Session of Congress.

Washington, June 6.—About the first of next month full civil government will be set up in the Philippine islands, exactly as provided by the Philippine commission. As soon after that date as administrative machinery can be made ready for it the new Philippine tariff will be proclaimed, also following out the original plan formed before the announcement of the decisions of the supreme court last week. It was also decided that there was no reason for an extra session of congress. These determinations followed a careful study of the jurisdictions of the court by Attorney General Knox and Secretary Root, the results of which were made known to the cabinet meeting yesterday. After two hours discussion the cabinet was unanimous in the opinion that the recent supreme court decisions called for no change in the government's program. As to the legal status of the islands, the officials have nothing to say, but while reserving full liberty to meet any legal attacks as may be thought best the general statement is made that the

in the Philippines is to be by virtue of the supreme power reposed in the president; it may be either as commander-in-chief of the United States military establishment or by reason of the special designation of the Spooner law, perhaps either, it is said, would be sufficient. The civil government to be set up it to be established under the military government and will be a civil government exercised through the military powers of the president. The collector at San Francisco will continue collecting Dingley duties on imports from the Philippines, as the cabinet has assured itself that the practice is legal, or at any rate they are not bound to declare otherwise in the absence of a controlling decision by the highest judicial authority. The failure of the court to announce a decision in the fourteen diamond rings case, the one involving the legality of the imposition of Dingley duties on goods coming from the Philippines, is regarded as warranting the belief that the court did not find in this case a parallel to the De Lima case.

CAILLES MUST ACT QUICKLY.

Filipino Leader Given Until Monday to Make Up His Mind.

Manila, June 6.—Gueverra, adjutant to Gen. Cailles, had a three-hours' interview with Aguinaldo yesterday. He said that Cailles did not believe that Aguinaldo had been captured, and consequently issued a proclamation characterizing Aguinaldo's address to the Filipino people as an American trick. Aguinaldo, through Guevarra, advised Cailles to surrender immediately. After this interview Gen. Wade and Gen. Sumner informed Guevarra that Cailles must notify them at Pagsanjan not later than next Monday of his decision in the matter. The American generals declined to guarantee that Cailles would not be prosecuted. Gen. Trias, in company with Senor Lucban, brother of the insurgent leader still operating in Samar, has gone to Samar island and will attempt to induce Lucban to surrender.

AN EXCITING RACE.

Passenger Steamers Take Each Other's Measure.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 6.—The hundred-mile race between Cleveland and Erie yesterday between the Cleveland passenger steamer City of Erie, owned by the Cleveland & Buffalo Transit company, and the Tashmoo, Detroit's crack passenger boat, owned by the White Star company, was in many respects the most notworthy race ever sailed on fresh water. The Erie covered the distance in 4:19:09, passing the stake boat at Erie forty-five seconds ahead of the Tashmoo. It was pronounced by old vesselmen to be the prettiest race ever witnessed. Aside from winning the supposed championship of the Great Lakes, the Erie won about $100,000 for those who bet on her.

EVEN CHANCE FOR ALL.

Large Number of White Settlers Will Be Driven Off Reservations.

Washington, June 6. — Prior to the opening for settlement this summer of lands in Oklahoma, now forming part of the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache reservations, about 1,000 white squatters will be driven off by the United States troops. Secretary Root has sent orders to Gen. Merriam, commanding the department of Colorado, directing that cavalry be forwarded for that purpose. Thousands of applications for homesteads have been filed and the officials hope to give everybody an even chance.

Attacked by Masked Men.

Gunnison, Colo., June 6.—Hans Colburne, a sheep herder, arrived in today and reported that twenty masked men attacked the camp where he was employed six miles from Spencer, Gunnison county, made prisoners of the herders and slaughtered 2,500 of the 5,000 sheep in the herd. The sheep were recently driven over from Utah. The mob is supposed to have been comprised of cattlemen of the vicinity.

Destroyed by Fire.

Saginaw, Mich., June 6.—The sawmill and planingmill owned by Gov. A. T. Bliss at Carrollton, a suburb of Saginaw, was destroyed by fire last night. The fire spread to the lumber yard of Thompson & Lamb and burned fiercely. The total loss will approximate $50,000.

Killed in a Runaway.

Helena, Mont., June 6.—John Egland was killed in a runaway near Harlow, the body being found by a searching party twenty-four hours after the accident occurred.

The Songs Mirandy Sings

By Roy Farrell Greene.

Mirandy's voice is gettin' cracked, a little quaver floats
From out her pretty mouth when she attempts the higher notes.
An', all in all, though still I love her just as much, I know
She cannot warble like she did some thirty years ago.
But lots o' times, when I'm at work around the barn, I hear
In some old song I'd half forgot, her voice a-ringin' clear,
A honeysuckle of a tune that round my ol' heart clings—
An' fresh with youthful blossoms are the songs Mirandy sings.

It's "Hard Times Come Again No More," "John Anderson My Jo,"
Or where that feller talks to Tom 'bout "Twenty Years Ago,"
"Ben Bolt," "Lorena," "Home, Sweet Home," er maybe that ol' tune
That makes you walk with Bobby Burns the banks of "Bonny Doon."
I wouldn't trade a one o' them old melodies we knew
For all these new ones writ about a Hannah girl er Lou,
Since we had sweet ol' tunes them days an' not these rag-time things,
An', somehow, love jes gushes out the songs Mirandy sings.

The one that of some Maggie tells, "When You and I Were Young."
It 'pears t' me's the sweetest thing a mortal ever sung,
An' better yet than that, a glimpse of heaven I behold,
When to my ears comes stealin' "Silver Threads Among the Gold."
Though modern songs an' operays the younger folks may please,
I'd rather hear a cracked voice in the old-time melodies
Than Patti's throat or Melba's warble hifalutin' things—
The songs of thirty years ago, the songs Mirandy sings.

Story of a Boy.

BY JULIA TRUITT BISHOP.

Author "Deborrah of Lost Creek," etc.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

She was listening to the uniformed graybeard at the window, bending toward him a little with an air of charmed interest that warmed the heart under the gold braid. Fluttering down to them the length of the drawing room came the hostess, that foolish little Mrs. Lessing, and they heard her saying to the gentleman beside her, while she was yet far off:

"Oh, I've just found you in time, and it's awfully awkward, but you know how people are always disappointing you at the last moment. You were to have gone down to dinner with Clare Rigdon, and Mrs. Harding with Raymond Blaine, and neither of them came——so sorry——"

The girl at the window had not changed her position in the least. She still leaned over the arm of her chair toward the uniform, but the General was suddenly conscious that the lovely young face had lost something of its color.

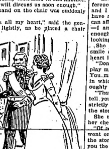
"Oh, Mrs. Harding," cried Mrs. Lessing, as the girl stood up and smiled graciously at her hostess; "so awkward for a husband and wife to go out to dinner together—people disappointed me—but would you let Mr. Harding take you out, just to oblige me?"

The hostess did not wait for a reply, but took General Blake's arm and led him away. The two were left alone, both standing in the shadow of the window curtains. She was twisting the silken fringe of the drapery between her fingers. She did not look at him, but she saw that the hand resting on the back of the chair from which she had risen was shaken.

"Since we are within full view of a number of our dearest enemies," she said with a scornful smile, still not looking at him, "it might be as well to play the farce out and look—well—as decently interested in one another. People will discuss us soon enough."

The hand on the chair was suddenly steady.

"With all my heart," said the gentleman lightly, as he placed a chair for her further back in the window embrasure, and took another, close at hand. "We will disappoint them for once."



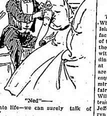
She took General Blake's arm.

She looked beyond him, at the throng that danced and promenaded and walked down the long succession of rooms. She looked anywhere but at him.

"While it is really awkward," she said with a bitter voice and a charming smile, "for a husband to be forced to take his wife out to dinner, still, one may live through it under certain circumstances. One has but to remember that it is the last time he will ever be afflicted with her presence, and much may be borne. Really I scarcely expected to see you here tonight. Was I not led to suppose that you were to start for Europe today?"

"I start tomorrow instead," he replied, coldly. "The delay was fortunate. It gives me the opportunity to defer a nine days' wonder for yet another day. Let us do it thoroughly, while we are doing it. What shall we discuss that will bring a pleasant expression to our faces; that will make us seem not merely tolerant of one another, but absolutely absorbed, devoted——"

"Let us talk of Love," she said, with a burst of scorn and despair that sent a crimson over her pale face. "Remembering our desolate home—my desolate life—we can surely talk of that."



"Ned"——

"You are right," he said, leaning a little nearer. "We will talk of love."

She shrank away from him a little, but at the same moment she smiled and nodded at Mrs. Lessing, who passed near.

"Love," he repeated. "What a difference it makes in people's lives! You and I have agreed to say good-bye—have already said it, in fact, and we can afford to discuss love impersonally. —I am afraid you are not smiling enough. I notice two or three people looking this way."

She smiled immediately; such a smile as comes to the lips after the heart is broken.

"Don't be afraid," she said, "I will play my part. I am deeply interested. You may go on with the one subject in which you may be considered thoroughly versed."

"Thanks," he said, easily. "Shall I tell you a story, in order to make it strictly impersonal? I will tell you the story of a Boy."

She moved a little, enough to drop her cheek to her hand.

"Of course there was a Girl," he went on; "but I will leave her out of the story as far as I can. I will tell you the story of a Boy, because I know his story—because I have seen into his wild, undisciplined, unformed boy heart, and have watched it make great mistakes, and repent of them without words, and slowly break.—Are you still smiling? I can't see your face, but those people out yonder can, and we are playing the farce for them."

"I am smiling," she said, without moving.

"The Boy fell in love," he said. "He was very young, and had been raised without a mother. I am afraid he was a mere selfish brute, and when he wanted anything he had to have it. He saw the Girl, and loved her, and would have waded through blood to win her—and won her. I think he was selfish, even in winning her, but he was beginning to be unselfish—he was beginning to be a nobler Boy—and there was great need of it. You see, he loved her—he loved her too much. He was unreasonable. I have looked into his heart, and I know that now. He was half Boy and half savage, and thought himself a man, whose judgment was always good, and who was always right. He thought that he was always good, and who was always right. He thought that he was to be regarded always—he didn't think of regarding her. And yet, he loved her—in some blind, unreasoning way, such as boys have. And because he loved her he kept hastening on to his doom, and dragging her with him. He couldn't wake up to the fact that he was slowly killing love in her. It is one of the saddest things, that people who love one another truly and tenderly can live to be alienated, isn't it? But that is what happened to the Boy. He was young—they were both young—and he was undisciplined—and love was hurt with jar and fret! Over and over again they passed through storms which left them cast ashore in a desert land. They said bitter, heart-breaking things to one another, and it was because the Boy loved her that the bitter things hurt and rankled. And so at last he rose up and said, 'This is enough—I will end it. I will go away today and will never trouble you again."

He paused, and she stirred a little, but he could not see her face.

"And so, he went down to the boat," he said, steadily; "but even when his foot was upon the gangplank he turned back and stood leaning against something in his utter misery, because he had all at once grown to be a man, and was suffering all a man's agony. That is the end of the story of the Boy—except that the man looked up and saw that foolish little Mrs. Lessing waving her hand at him from a carriage, and remembered that both of them—he and the Girl—were to have been her guests tonight. And such a hungering came upon him to look upon her face again—that he came—knowing that by tomorrow he might summon strength to go——"

"Ned?"

She raised her face and looked at him. Her lips trembled like a hurt child's, even while she was smiling at him.

"Ned," she murmured, brokenly; "the Girl was very young and inexperienced. Don't you think she ought to have a chance to try over again?—And you didn't know——that she was in the boat,—hidden away—and that she came very near being taken to Europe——very near indeed——when you turned back so suddenly——"

"Isn't it beautiful to watch Mr. and Mrs. Harding?" asked the lady at Mrs. Lessing's right. "They are like two young lovers. Do they know they are at the table? Do they know there is such a thing as food in the world? They have done us all the honor to forget we are living!"

But Mrs. Lessing did not reply aloud. She merely looked, and her eyes were sparkling and brimming.

"I may be foolish, but I can manage some things," she whispered into her fan.

Where the Poetess Dines.

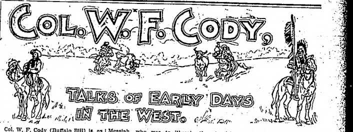
The dining-room in Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox's home, on Long Island sound, is all windows, which face the water. Before the largest of them, a spacious bay window, stands the dining table. The room is filled with memories of people who have dined there. Their pictures gaze at one from every side. There are half a dozen portraits of the statuesque Julie Opp, there is the droll, mirthful face of Marshall Wilder; the fair Ellen Terry, Mrs. Brown Potter, William Gillette's inscrutable countenance; that placid old lady, Mrs. Jefferson Davis; Isabel Irving, Kathryn Kidder, J. E. Dodson, and his pretty wife, Annie Irish. Some of Mrs. Wilcox's guests have left autographs on the cream-painted walls. One comes from Edwin Markham. It is printed in fine, large characters, with splendid vermillion initials. He said: "A place where passing souls can rest On the way, and be their best."

Canal Tolls a Problem.

The question of tolls on the Isthmian canal is not so simple as it was in the case of the Suez, writes a correspondent of the New York Post. We have a much greater "marginal traffic" to consider—one which may be controlled by the rate of toll. The west coast of South America, in its dealings with Europe, ought to furnish about one-third of the available traffic of the new canal, if opened in 1915. All that traffic practically could pay a toll of $1 a ton. Between the west coast of South America and the eastern ports of the United States the traffic could pay a still heavier toll, as the saving over the route "round the Horn" would be still greater. On the principle of charging whatever the traffic could bear, certain cargoes going through the canal could doubtless afford to pay $3 or $4 a ton.

Remarkable Statesman in Japan.

Mr. Hoshi Toru, minister of communications, is one of modern Japan's remarkable men. Having studied law in England 25 years ago, and being called to the English bar, he started his life as an official in the judicial department. Here his bellicose nature soon brought him into collision with his less enlightened and more conservative colleagues. The government then in power removed him to the Yokohama customs. Later he took to politics and identified himself with the liberals, who overran the country with stirring speeches, much to the discomfort of the government. He was twice arrested and imprisoned for political offenses. Now he is the leader of the liberals, or Jiyuta, as they are called in Japan.



Col. W. F. Cody,

Talks of Early Days in the West.

Col. W. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill) is, as a general rule, rather economical in the matter of giving interviews to the public press, but while in Boston with his great educational exhibition the other day he was induced to say a few words about himself and the development of the great West which will be of interest to readers generally. Speaking of his early life he said:

"There were a heap of occupations for boys in those days, and I guess I tackled 'em all; driving loose cattle behind a bull train, carrying dispatches for freighting outfits, following and going with trappers for furs on different streams. That's how I learned to know the Indian—by going with traders who trade with 'em for furs. When I was along in my teens I was perfectly familiar with all the country from the Canadian river in the south to the Yellowstone of the north, and the lands between the Rocky mountains and the Missouri river. I became thoroughly acquainted with the Indians, know their favorite haunts, their camps and their bad lands."

"What was the real cause of the first Indian uprising?"

"It was the effect of the bad example set them by the white men. During the war of the rebellion the Indian heard that the white men were killing each other off. They kept hearing about it for two years, until all the tribes were talking about the gradual extinction of the white man, who had wonderful guns and ammunition. At last they held a grand meeting which led to a general uprising. They obtained modern guns and armed themselves like the white men, and it was their impression that they could sweep across the continent clear through to the 'great river,' the Atlantic, and recapture their country from the whites."

The material for western romance began at this time with a vengeance, and followed the dramatic flavor that literature had gained from the sorrows of the civil war. The United States government is not a romantic organization, however, and as soon as peace was declared in Washington between the North and the South, the entire forces of the regular army were hurried out to the frontier, commanded in turn by such men as Sherman, Sheridan, Hancock, Custer, Carr, Miles, Crook, Augur, Ord, Hazen, Emery, Duncan, Forsythe, King, Reynolds, Terry, Penrose, Palmer, Gibbon, Canby, Henry, Whistler, Crosby, Greely, Sudley, Mills, Hayes, Schwitzer and many others. Most of these officers were totally unfamiliar with the plains, and then came into existence the man of whom "Bill" Cody is an ideal representative—the scout.

"You see, when these army fellows came out our way," continued Col. Cody, "the question was, Who could they find to act as guides and scouts? The miners were inefficient; they didn't tell much about the hiding places of the Indians, so they began to look around for fellows like me, who had been raised out there. When Gen. Sherman came West in '65 and '66 to make his great treaty with the Kiowa and the Comanche Indians, I was first employed as a scout and dispatch carrier. Well, he soon found that I knew the country better than any man in his command, and he made me his guide. I felt considerable pride in my responsibility, too, for I was pretty young to have an old army veteran like Sherman leaning on me." He paused.

"How young?" I asked.

"Nineteen!" he said, emphatically, "and in two years—that is, in '68—when Sherman took command of the field, he made me chief of scouts and guide of the United States army."

"Scouting was a trade?" I asked.

"It's a gift. The Indian is the natural scout, and he'll keep a white man hustling, with all his clothes on, and no sleep either to beat him."

"The scout know his game?"

"Yes, sir, as well as the Indian could hunt his. A scout had to have eyes, ears and brain working overtime when he was on the trail, I can tell you."

"You followed the tracks of the Indian ponies?"

"Tracks, nothing!" said "Bill" contemptuously. "That's no sawdust country out there; it's all grass. You couldn't see a hoof print. I've followed a single horse file by watching the grass and noticing how it was broken. I could tell the way the grass broke if the Indians were traveling fast or slow, horses packed heavy or light, ridden by Indians or running loose. The manner in which a moccasin shaped its tread on the prairie would tell me what tribe our enemy belonged to, and by their camp embers whether it was a party on the warpath or peaceful Indians. Nothing made an army man so sore as to have a guide make a dry camp at night, so that a scout had to be conversant with the country and reach water when nightfall came.

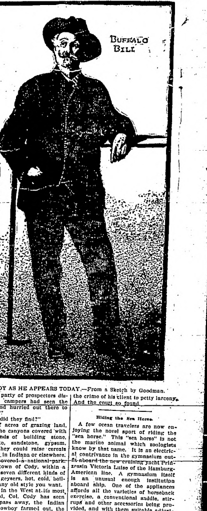
The subjection of the Indians was one of the toughest propositions to face. In 1877 the Pine Ridge trouble broke out. The Indians expected their Messiah, who was to liberate them from captivity. The suppression of this uprising fell to the lot of Gen. Miles, and he fought, as he always does when in command, with his head. He put down the ghost dance without the loss of hardly a life on either side, and in all my service as a scout I never saw finer generalship than his at Pine Ridge.

"Even in the thick of the Indian fighting it was impossible for a man to escape seeing the great possibilities of those arid states, but it took a professor to convince me of the chances of civilizing that country. I was stationed at Fort McPherson, Neb., Gen. Sheridan, in command of the Missouri division. The general came to me one day and instructed me to act as guide for Prof. O. C. Marsh and 25 Yale students who wanted to go through the 'Bad Lands' on a fossil expedition. Well! I got kinder jealous of that professor. He was always talkin' a whole lot of stuff about that country that I'd never heard before. He said that the Great Big Horn basin was formed by the passage of a big snake that had finally cut its way through the Big Horn canyon. He went in to tell why there should be in this basin the finest soil in the world; that there must be great mineral deposits there, probably sea gold. I said to him then that I guess he thought he knew more about that country than I did, and told him he'd better go it alone. Well, sir, the old fossil hunter was right. Twenty years later a party of prospectors discovered gold, campers had seen the color of it and hurried out there to locate claims."

"And what did they find?"

"Millions of acres of grazing land, the sides of the canyons covered with timber, all kinds of building stone, marble, granite, sandstone, gypsum. They found they could raise cereals as good as any in Indiana or elsewhere. They had discovered a national park. Why, in my town of Cody, within a few miles are seven different kinds of natural water geysers, hot, cold, boiling, freezing, any old style you want.

Starting life in the West at its most thrilling period, Col. Cody has seen the buffaloes pass away, the Indian subdued, the cowboy farmed out, the settlers crowding in. He has been of active service to the United States government in all these years; but the most American thing that this typical American has done is to build a town in the shadow of the canyons and baptize it with his own name.—Boston Daily Herald.



COL. CODY AS HE APPEARS TODAY.—From a Sketch by Goodman.

Dixie's Land Again.

The familiar controversy never languishes. What is the origin of Dixie's Land or Dixie Land, or Dixie? On, on, it goes. I believe it was right here on Manhattan Island, and that the fellow who wrote about it being a "land of cotton, 'simmon seed, and sandy bottom" was a chump. Old Man Dixie was a slaveholder on Manhattan Island, who removed his slaves to the Southern states, where they had to work harder and fare worse; so they were always sighing for their old home, which they called "Dixie Land." The "nigger" imagination soon advanced this island into a sort of Delectable Country, or Land of Beulah.—New York Press.

Odd Oklahoma Justice.

If one wants to find an extraordinary brand of justice he must go to Oklahoma or some other region known in general parlance as the bounding west. At Alva a man was arrested for stealing two hogs, which he hauled to Waukomis and sold for $20.50. The law defines grand larceny as the stealing of something of more value than $20, and petit larceny as the stealing of something of less value than this sum. The question in the hog case was whether it was grand or petty larceny. The lawyer for the prisoner argued that while the hogs had been sold for more than $20, the prisoner was entitled to a credit of $1 for hauling them to market, which would reduce their value to less than $20 and the crime of his client to petty larceny. And the court so found.

Riding the Sea Horse.

A few ocean travelers are now enjoying the novel sport of riding the "sea horse." This "sea horse" is not the marine animal which zoologists know by that name. It is an electrical contrivance in the gymnasium outfit aboard the new cruising yacht Prinzessin Victoria Luise of the Hamburg-American line. A gymnasium itself is an unusual enough institution aboard ship. One of the appliances affords all the varieties of horseback exercise, a conventional saddle, stirrups and other accessories being provided, and with them suitable adjusting mechanism, so that the whole outfit can be given more or less violent vertical and slightly horizontal reciprocating movement through a system of cams and connecting rods, simulating very closely the motion of the animal in life.

Excerpts from McKinley.

This Republic can never fall as long as the citizens are vigilant.

There is but one side, happily, now, and we are all together on that side.

No Solid South, no Solid North, save when solidly for the flag and the Union.

The American people never ran away from a difficult question or from a well-defined duty.

We are not a warlike people. We are not a military people. We never go to war unless we have to make peace.

There is no relation except that of home and family so close and intimate and sacred as that of comradship in war.

Don't be alarmed about militarism or imperialism. We know no imperialism in the United States except the imperialism of a sovereign people.

We have more agreements than differences. We may differ as to politics, agree as to principles, but we keep in the home circles and settle our diffirences among ourselves.

We want to settle our diffirences if we have any with any of the powers of the world, by arbitration. We want to exhaust every peaceable means for settlement before we go to war.

We want to send the products of our farms, our factories and our mines into every market in the world, to make the foreign people familiar with our products, and the way to do that is to make them familiar with our flag.

What we want to do now is to be prudent in our prosperity, save while we can, and be strong if a storm should come. Whenever it comes, let us be fortified by the practice of economy while we are all so well employed.

The thing today is to be practical. What you want is to get education, and with it you want good character, and with these you want unfaltering industry, and if you have these three things you will have success anywhere and everywhere.

No sectionalism now mars the map of the United States. Our opinions upon public questions of national interest and national welfare do not rest upon the color of the uniforms we wore in 1861, but upon our convictions of right and duty in 1901.

Our past has gone into history. No brighter one adorns the annals of mankind. Our task is for the future. We leave the old century behind us, holding on to its achievements and cherishing its memories, and turn with hope to the new with its opportunities and its obligations.

Whatever agreement is entered in with the inspector must be ratified by congress. The bulk of the land in question is in Red Lake county."

"Silence! You are betraying yourself!"

Beatrice could not repress a scream. In her overwrought condition, it seemed to her that little short of a miracle had been effected.

She forgot all care, all prudence, as, clinging to him, she cried aloud that he would stay beside her.

"Do not leave me! Oh, do not leave me!" she pleaded, pitifully.

But neither action nor words roused in Chester's mind suspicion. They appeared to him but the counterpoise to her feeling of aversion against himself. Besides, now but one sentiment absorbed him.

What had the empty drawer contained, and where had its contents flown? Had Beatrice, indeed, discovered the missing will? And if so, who was it who at this moment shared her discovery? It behooved him, indeed, to know and ascertain this fact.

"Beatrice," he said, calming himself to use the old, persuasive tone, "forgive me if, a moment ago, I was harsh. But tell me what has happened. Have you, indeed, been robbed?"

"Caution!" whispered Bertie's voice, again.

But its accents reached her ear alone.

"To-morrow—give me until to-morrow, and I will tell you. To-night I can not talk."

"But you were robbed?"

"I found some papers in the desk, and in the darkness some one snatched them from me. I thought that it was you."

The ashen pallor deepened on Chester's face.

"Wait here," he said. "I will return."

"Bertie!" whispered Beatrice, in a low voice of supreme ecstasy. "Bertie! It is indeed you?"

"Yes, my darling—yes," answered the so-called Mr. Grant. "Is my disguise, indeed, so perfect?"

"Your disguise so perfect and my despair so hopeless! Oh, Bertie, why have you not come before?"

"Because, my love, until your letter reached me, I knew not where you were. My anxiety concerning you was too great to admit even the effort necessary to the tracing of this fox to the earth. But were you, indeed, robbed to-night, Beatrice? Tell me quickly, dear."

"Yes. I had just opened the secret drawer. I only discovered its existence this afternoon. Ah, Bertie, if I had this afternoon. Ah, Bertie, if I had known then that the desk was to be made your property, all this might have been saved."

"I tried to give you some word, some hint, but dared not risk discovery. As it was, I hoped that you would understand."

"No: I was blind. My misery blinded me to all else. And then the wild, mad hope that I had discovered the papers that meant to us both so much, so dazzled me that I could see nothing—nothing. But I had only clutched my treasure tight, when, in the darkness, some one stole upon me from behind and snatched it from me. The next instant—so it seemed to me—the room was flooded with light, and you and Randolph Chester were standing looking at me. In that moment, Bertie, I understood the feeling which prompts men to murder. I thought that it was he who was the thief."

"No; for I followed him directly from the drawing room. It will be a bitter fight between us as to who shall discover the thief and regain possession of the papers. Meanwhile, dear, I am on his track. Night and day, I follow like the sleuth-hound on the trail of the deer; and every hour, every minute, I am nearing the goal. Yet, one false step would ruin all. Are you sure, Beatrice, that you are now strong enough not to betray us by word or glance?"

"Ah, Bertie, to know you are near gives me back all my lost strength! you need no longer fear for me. It was only when I felt myself alone—only in the moments when it seemed to me that the shadow of death lay like an eternal wall of separation between us—that my strength and courage alike entirely forsook me."

"Listen, then, dear, and I will tell you my plans. I—"

He paused.

A step sounded in the room beyond; a rustle of silken skirts was heard. The next instant Miss Lorrimer entered the room.

"Mr. Grant!" she exclaimed. "you have forsaken us! The tree has reached a point where your taste is absolutely essential to its further progress."

"You have not seen it, Miss Markham," he said, rising as he spoke. "Will you not lend us the benefit of your taste, as well?"

To Miss Lorrimer's surprise, Beatrice assenting laid her hand upon his arm.

"Has she fascinated him, too?" she thought.

Half an hour later she saw him write, on a sheet he had torn from his note book, a few words.

"You would give me no commissions to-day, Miss Markham," he said. "May I give you some for to-morrow, though they will not demand a trip to the city?"

"Are they difficult?" she questioned, with a smile.

But here was a ring in her tone, a gladness in her smile. Edith's quick ears and eyes were not slow to note.

"Something lies behind those simple words," she thought.

Narrowly she watched Beatrice as she glanced at the few written words.

She held the paper a moment, then tore it, idly, into tiny fragments, which she threw toward the open fire.

Only two reached it. The rest fell upon the hearth.

A little later the good-nights were triumph—an interview, however, to said, and all departed to their apartments.

Beatrice and Mr. Grant exchanged no further words, but long after the house was silent the door of Edith Lorrimer's room softly opened, and a white-robed figure stole through the hall and down the stairs.

Like a spirit she glided into the deserted drawing room and knelt beside the embers of the dying fire.

By the feeble light thus gained she gathered up every fragment which attested to Beatrice's work of destruction.

Holding them closely in her hand, she regained her chamber.

A half-hour later, with a smile of triumph on her lips, she had them spread before her, fitting like a piece of mosaic, with but two parts missing.

And this was the commission whose knowledge, with Beatrice, she now shared:

"Meet me to-morrow morning at 8 in the library. If we are interrupted, I will explain —— (here a word was missing), but above all, be —— (and here another.)"

But she could dispense with both.

She wound her tiny, jeweled watch with scrupulous care. It must not fail her, for, by a strange coincidence, she, too, must keep an appointment for the hour mentioned in the note. There should be to the interview between Mr. Grant and Beatrice an unsuspected audience.

What new weapon would it put into her hands?

CHAPTER XXIX.

Was it the spirit of man or devil which had wrested the papers, of such vital import to Beatrice Markham from her hand? To her it seemed as though a second of time had not clapsed before the two men had appeared upon the scene, and her misfortune had, for the moment, paralyzed her.

A full minute had gone by; a minute which enabled the thief to steal like a cat through the darkness, softly to open the door leading to the guest chamber assigned to Mr. Grant, and, through one of the windows, drop to the ground beneath.

The night was very cold, and a rising wind was howling through the bare branches of the oaks. A pale moon had risen, and peeped, now and then, from great banks of wind clouds.

Close in the shadow of the house the man cowered, as he raised himself from the ground where he had fallen.

It was Tyrrell, and his teeth chattered in his head; but it was a shiver of fear, rather than of the bitter cold.

"If there'd been any light I couldn't have done it," he muttered —"not if I'd seen her eyes! But she said these papers would prove the young chap's innocence, and that manes—that manes as it would prove the guilty are guilty! If it'd been gold, I'd not have stolen a dollar of it! It's not her gold as I'm wanting. His innocence, eh! It just seemed as if she was talking out loud to me in the darkness. I'd have let her alone—poor, pretty lamb—if she'd left that out. Well, I've got 'em now—what shall I do with 'em. I'd go back to the lodge, and burn 'em, if the old man wasn't up there. I'll hide 'em—aye, safe and sound, where Tyrrel O'Byrne himself never'll be after finding 'em ag'in."

Five minutes later the lodge keeper staggered into his own lodge.

The old man was sitting before the fire, as if he had not stirred one moment from his place.

"It's a cold night!" he muttered, as an icy blast blew in through the open door.

"Aye! give me the cratur, quick!" cried Tyrrell, and he took a huge draught from the steaming jug.

At that moment a quick step sounded without; the lodge door was violently thrown open, and, pale and breathless, Tyrrell's master stood upon the threshold.

"You dog!" he cried, "is it thus that you obey thy orders. Have you been absent from the lodge to-night?"

"I was ill, and couldn't lave, Mr. Chester; beg pardon, sir."

"I don't believe it. There's been a robbery committed up at the house—some important papers were stolen from Miss Markham. She is sure you are the thief. Come, confess! Give up the papers to me, and I'll say no more about it!"

The old man by the fire cast at Tyrrell a quick, covert glance, but the lodge keeper's face betrayed nothing.

"I couldn't stale, Mr. Chester," he replied. "I'd not dare, unless," he added, with a low chuckle, "as you'd help me out."

"Help you out! I'll help you to the scaffold yet! But give me those papers, you rascal, or I'll turn you, neck and heels, out of my house to-morrow!"

"Maybe you'll think better of it to-morrow, Mr. Chester. I've known yo to slape on your anger before. But I've got no papers, all the same. You can s'arch me and the house, too, and you're welcome to all you can find, barring the whisky."

Chester came closer, and, leaning his hand on Tyrrell's shoulder, whispered in his ear:

"Give me the papers," he said. "You shall have a thousand dollars in gold for them."

"I can't give ye what I ain't got," answered the man, with a drunken chuckle.

"You fool!" thundered Chester. "To-morrow you go!"

To the old man he vouchsafed neither word nor glance, and he now strode out, the door clashing angrily behind him.

Tyrrell bent nearer the fire, stretching out his hands to warm them at the blaze.

"You take your dismissal easy," said the old man.

"My dismissal!" echoed the lodgekeeper, in a thick, drunken tone. "Hush your clatter, fool! It's not Randolph Chester as'll dare carry out his threats. Oh, no!"

"I don't think that you like this master of yours too well. Am I right?"

"What's that to you?"

"Nothing, nothing. Only I thought myself I could show you a way where you might get the upper hand of him, and keep it, too."

"Then it's true, what he suspects—that you're here in Talbot's service, if, indeed, you're not Talbot's self?" confessed Tyrrell, in his drunken confidence.

"And so he suspects that?" replied the other. "Well, he's wrong, my man; but suppose he were right! Suppose I could show you a way out of your trouble. Suppose, by a confession of how you stole the money from Mr. Markham, you might be pardoned, and he condemned as your accomplice, what then?"

"Over and over Tyrrell revolved the words in his drunken brain.

"How I stole the money?" he repeated, softly, while the eyes watching him never left his face. "How I stole the money! Curse you!" he cried, in a sort of frenzy. "Do you think Tyrrell O'Byrne a fool? Oh, God, his eyes are looking at me! See! See! them glaring at me from the dark corners! Save me from him! Save me, I say!" and he cowered in his chair in a drunken delirium, muttering and mumbling to himself.

Presently he fell into a heavy, drunken slumber.

"A cunning dog!" muttered the old man. "But where did he disappear to-night, and what are the papers of which Chester spoke? I saw him enter the library, and waited for him outside, but discovered him stealing by another path to the lodge. Is he the thief, as they suspect, and can the papers be upon him?"

He rose as the latter thought crossed his brain, and, with curious skill, examined thoroughly the clothing of the man who slumbered in his drunken stupor.

"I've let a good job escape me to-night, I fear," he murmured to himself, and, rising, went into the next room. "I'm thinking there'll be some work to-morrow. I guess I'd better get what sleep I can."

Five minutes later his snores mingled with those of Tyrrell in the room beyond; and when the dawn broke the old man was missing.

CHAPTER XXX.

When Beatrice entered the library next morning, Mr. Grant (as Mr. Chester's guest was known) was already there.

He sat writing, but sprang up eagerly to greet her.

Holding her little hand in his, he gazed with adoring rapture into the pale, beautiful face.

"My darling!" he exclaimed, "I must not even draw you to my heart, nor give you one kiss. I can scarcely dare to look at you; yet how I have hungered for this moment!"

She strove in vain to speak—to answer him, but her lips only quivered, and great tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Control yourself, my love," he pleaded, "At any moment we may be interrupted."

At any moment, he said; yet, absorbed in each other, neither dreamed that the dreaded moment of interruption had already come. Neither saw the heavy curtain tremble, nor detected the gleaming eyes which, through its parted folds, watched every gesture, every look—the keen ears which drank in every word.

"Listen, Beatrice," continued Bertie. "But sit here on this arm chair, dear, while I go back to the desk. There! We shall be unsuspected now, if any one should enter. Our meeting here must appear an accident. Once more we are Miss Markham and Mr. Grant, Mr. Grant? It was a bold step, dear, was it not? But when you, with eyes of love, did not discover me, I knew that I was safe from him. I shaved off my moustache, darkened my skin and dyed my hair. My beard, of course, is false. It was all made easier for me by his suspecting a detective I sent down to watch Tyrrell to be me. It helps me play my role the better. Affairs, however, are drawing to a climax. In regard to the man at the lodge, Chester will probably to-day discover his mistake concerning him. I will take good care, however, that his suspicions do not fall on me. In fact, I think that I may prophesy that he will give me his confidence and seek my counsel. Not a bad idea, will it be? To further play into my hands, he asked me to send down two men yesterday from the city detective officers. Of course, I brought down two in my own service. I almost wish, darling, you were still in ignorance of it all. But, if I escape the next few hours without detection, we shall, I believe, bring Randolph Chester to bay. And detection is well-nigh impossible. Only one thing troubles me—the loss of the papers last night. Of that theft Chester is innocent. Who could have taken them?"

"I cannot tell. I only felt a hot breath, reeking with the fumes of liquor on my cheek, a rough arm about my waist; and then, almost without a struggle, so great was my amaze, that I let the papers go. They would have proved all, Bertie. I feel—I know it. It seemed as if papa's spirit came back from the grave to show me the hiding place. But I found them, only to lose them!"

And, burying her face in her hands, the sobs came thick and fast.

'Hush, dear! Control yourself. I feel as if our long night were ended—as if the dawn at last were breaking. Randolph Chester yet shall meet his deserts and you, my dearest, proudly assert your rights. Meantime, Beatrice, confide in no one—above all, in Edith Lorrimer. She hates you—her lover loves you—and her very soul is consumed by jealous fires. Ah, my love, they kindled in my own, when, the other night, I, unseen, listened to his passionate confession—a confession she, too, overheard, and which kindled the flames of hatred to a longing for revenge. She is bold and unscrupulous. Should she and Randolph Chester play into each other's hands, they would be fitting tools each to the other's conscienceless skill. The day that sees you mistress of Grey Oaks—heiress to your father's wealth—and, above all, your claim established to the grand old home, will be to her, as to him, the day of cruel retribution. Oh, my love, to know that that day has dawned for you, I would gladly make my own life the sacrifice!"

"And without you to share it, Bertie, what would it all be worth?"

"You love me still, Beatrice? The words of passionate love to which you listened the other night found in your heart no echo? If it is love, only love I still may claim, and not some fancied debt of gratitude?"

"I love you—you only!" she whispered, softly.

But the whisper reached him where he sat.

He sprang up, his face illumined by the light of passionate ecstasy. He made one short step toward her.

In another moment, prudence forgotten, he would have caught her to his madly-beating heart, when a voice greeted him from the doorway with a gay good-morning.

It was their host.

Both rose and followed him into the breakfast room.

The library was left deserted.

Deserted? No; for the heavy curtains cautiously were lifted, and out from behind them crept a woman of tall and queenly form—a woman whose black eyes were fairly lurid with the light of fury, which alike had blanched her cheeks and lips to marble hue.

"So this is the lover she missed! He, too, knows my secret—my humiliation! Together they gloat over it! And she is to possess the triumph, throwing to me the defeat. Oh, you did well to warn her, Bertram Talbot; but your warning comes too late. Randolph Chester is on the wrong path, is he? He will come to you for counsel, eh? Aye, but it will be to lead you, blind fool, into the trap you have set for him! And you, Beatrice Markham, are to reign mistress of Grey Oaks? Methinks your castle will be the four walls of a mad house cell, while to your lover will be awarded that of a prison. Whose triumph will it be then? Triumph?" she paused, and an expression of acute suffering passed over her face. "To me revenge, but triumph—no! Will it all win me one glance of love from Allen's eyes—one word of softened utterance from Allen's lips—one caressing touch from Allen's hands? Ah, no! Should he guess my part in to-day's work he would but turn from me with instinctive horror. It would give him the pretext for which, all unconsciously, he longs—the pretext to break his vows! But he must never know—he must never suspect! When all the world believes this woman mad—when she is forever shut out from its sight in a mad-house—I may teach him to forget. I might have been a woman, had he loved me. As it is—oh, God!—I shudder and dare not look in one the spirits which have taken possession of my wretched soul. Love, jealousy, hate—to what can they not transform the human heart?

An hour later she and Randolph Chester were closeted together in an interview, from which she came forth with a livid face, but a smile of devilish which there had been no unseen witness. Its purport was known only to themselves.

CHAPTER XXXI.

The master of Grey Oaks was absent. At noon he had ordered his horse and rode, alone and unattended, to the village.

"A Christmas surprise I am preparing for you!" he said, as he vaulted into the saddle and waved his hand in farewell.

Evidently his errand, whatever its nature, inspired haste, for when he drew rein at the station his horse's flanks were white with foam.

A few moments later a message was sent over the wires, signed by his name, and addressed to New York's chief of police.

Evidently, the contemplated surprise ended for the present here, since, leaping once more into the saddle, he turned his horse's head homeward, but gave him neither whip nor spur to hasten him.

"I'm afraid, Bertie," whispered Beatrice, as she passed him in the hall, "Randolph Chester's surprise portends no good to us."

"Poor little girl! Am I not here? And I will never leave you again, Beatrice, come what will!"

Her thoughts were very busy with their dread import when Allen Layton came and stood beside her chair.

"You have forgiven me, Miss Markham?" he said, in low, earnest tones—"forgiven me that I let my passion find words?—forgiven me that I compelled you to share my unhappy secret? Yet, do you know, it was a relief to me when I had spoken?—when I know that Edith, too, had heard all—that the decision was in her hands? Ah, I told you, Miss Markham, that she coveted only my name, my wealth! She holds me by my bond. I shall not break it. But you will let me serve you in some way, however slight? Oh, Beatrice, why didn't our paths cross before? Tell me, my love—tell me—could I have taught you the lesson which to me, in my lonely desolation, is fraught only with infinite misery?"

A great pity was in the gray eyes as they uplifted themselves to his face; but it was pity unmixed with love, untainted by passion.

"You are too good, too true, too noble Mr. Layton, to sue, I think, in vain, at any heart which held no other shrine. But it is only just that I should tell you—I—I too, am pledged, and with all my soul I love the man to whom I am betrothed."

He staggered back an instant, as if she had struck him a mortal blow. Then he recovered himself.

"But why, then, is he not here with you?" he asked. "Why and how can he leave you alone and desolate?"

She longed to answer: "He is here." But prudence commanded silence.

"He is not to blame," she said, simply. "Randolph Chester is his enemy, as he is mine."

"Your enemy, and once my friend! I feel half-traitor as I accept his hospitality, with the doubts that you have kindled rising in my breast. Sometimes I think your fancy wrongs him."

SHE RUNS RIVER PACKETS.

Missouri Woman the Only Boat Agent in the United States.

At La Grange, Mo., an important landing for steamboats on the Mississippi river, Miss Lena Bohon is the duly accredited agent of a packet company and discharges all the duties of the office to the satisfaction of all concerned. She enjoys the unique distinction of being the only member of her sex to fill such a position, either in this or any other country, and is proud of the fact. It is only recently that it has been possible for a woman to successfully discharge the duties of such an office. Years ago the steamboat agent was a man. He had to be, because he had to bustle aboard arriving steamers and then bustle off as the gangplank was being hauled in. Then he had frequently to mingle with roustabouts. But there are not as many steamboats now as there used to be, and the business isn't done in the same way. This may, in part, account for Miss Lena Bohon's position. She was appointed in 1898, after the death of her father, who had been the agent of the Diamond Joe line for forty years. She is now agent for five steamers plying between St. Louis and St. Paul and two between Keokuk and Quincy. Miss Bohon has no assistant. She is always ready for duty at the old fashioned wharf house. When steamboats at night announce their approach Miss Bohon, who lives with her mother, five blocks away, hastily dresses, picks up her lantern and hurries to the landing place. If she desires the steamer to stop she flashes her lantern in a certain way. Officials of the packet companies aver that she is one of the most faithful, accurate and capable agents in their employ. She sells tickets, makes out freight bills and receipts, collects weekly accounts with the merchants and other shippers and checks off every bale of hay, bushel of wheat or tub of butter that goes on board a boat. She oversees personally the receiving and discharging of freight. At the age of 15 the affairs of the office could be safely intrusted to her care during a short absence of her father. She grew up in the atmosphere of this active life and her desire to continue in its environment is but natural.

Peanut King's Interesting Career.

F. W. Mills as a "peanut king" has had an interesting career. He began life as a peanut vender on a train. When only twelve years old he had contracts with several railroads running out of Chicago for the exclusive right to sell peanuts on the trains. This lad of twelve had grown men in his employ. Mills, the peanut vender, is now the employer of more than 600 men. He is manager of a company that makes slot machines, which supply salted peanuts. Mr. Mills will put 15,000 machines on the market. When all are out it will require 30,000 pounds of peanuts to supply them for one day. Mr. Mills has expended between $300,000 and $400,000 in laying in the supply he thinks he will need.—Indianapolis News.

Would Have a Treat.

An old darkey went to Memphis the other day to get his pension check cashed. After receiving his money, which amounted to $11, the old ex-slave sauntered down Front street to a produce house and bought three crates of cabbages. When they were delivered at the wharf late that afternoon the old man was there and received them with a mouth watering in anticipation of the good time ahead. "Whut yer gwine ter do wid dem cabbages?" inquired the negro drayman who delivered them. "Eat 'em," was the quick response. "I'se been free forty years and dis is de first time I'se had do money to buy 'nuff cabbage. I'se gwine ter eat cabbage till I furgit de way ter my mouf."

Bicycle Has No Rival.

At a dinner in his honor a mechanical inventor was asked: "What comes after the bicycle?" His reply was: "Gentlemen, there never will be any successor to the bicycle." When asked to explain so positive a statement he said: "There never can be a less amount of material put together with greater skill that will answer the purpose of human locomotion with greater ease and pleasure, or at a less original cost and less current expense to the user. The bicycle is one of the most consummate achievements of our mechanical development and one of the most beneficent contributions of mechanism to civilization. It has no rival and it can have no successor."

Bibliomancy.

Bibliomancy has been practiced for ages, but the old way was to open the Bible at random and lay the finger on a passage without looking at it. The text thus selected was supposed to be applicable to the person pointing it out. This form of divination obtains at this day among some rather sensible persons, who never make a move in business without first yielding to the bygone superstition. But it is not half so funny and weird as ichthyomancy, myomancy, alectryomancy, crithomancy, geomancy, onychomancy, gelóscopy and gyromancy.—New York Press.

Public Libraries of America.

Public libraries in this country have doubled in twenty years. A $400,000 public library opened at Newark, N. J., recently, has a lecture room, art gallery, museum, book lifts, bindery, a children's room, bicycle room and tea room for attendants.

Stephen Phillips' poetical drama "Herod" will shortly be translated into French, German, Italian, Russian and Swedish.

President Kruger's Single Drink.

Mr. Kruger, as every one knows, is a constant smoker; it is not, perhaps, so well understood that he has only once tasted alcohol in his life. That was at Bloemfontein, after signing the alliance with the Free State. Kruger is said to have taken off a bumper of champagne and put down the glass with a face of disgust.—London Daily News.

It gives you freedom and protection from your ailments. FAITH ALL THAT WAS NEEDED.

How an Italian Tenor Was Enabled to Reach High C.

"There was an Italian tenor at Convent Garden by the name of Tasca, who, I am sorry to say, sang his own praises better than the score," says Mr. William Parry, the stage director at the Metropolitan Opera house.

"For this and other reasons he was strongly disliked by all the workmen. One day he came to me and said, with a great show of mystery:

"'Tell me the exact spot.'

"I could not, for the life of me, understand what he wanted.

"'You know well enough what I mean,' he persisted. 'Show me the spot where Tamberlik sang the high C. There is always one spot on the scale that is better than all the others to stand on when you sing. Where is it?'

"'I'll show you later,' I replied. 'But remember, never a word; it would cost me my place if it should leak out.'

"Then I drove a brass tack into one of the stage boards, and he was overjoyed when I pointed out 'the exact spot.' And so were the workmen at the prospect of a joke at his expense. That night he carefully stood on the tack and sang the high C. Rushing into the wings, he exclaimed: 'Beautiful! Wonderful!' Ever afterward, no matter what part of the stage demanded his presence, he would rush to the tack when the time for the high C came, and there deliver it."—Saturday Evening Post.

Couldn't Wear Shoes.

Sumpter, Ill., June 10th.—Mrs. J. B. Flanigan, of this place, has suffered with dropsy for fifteen years. She was so very bad that for the last three years she has not been able to wear her shoes. She had doctored all the time, but was gradually getting worse.

Last winter Mr. Flanigan, who was very much discouraged, called for some medicine at Mr. J. J. Dale's drug store in Carmi. Mr. Dale persuaded him to have his wife try Dodd's Kidney Pills, and he bought six boxes. His wife used five out of the six, before she was entirely cured. She is now as sound and well as she ever was, completely restored to health, and free from any symptom whatever of dropsy.

To say that Mrs. Flanigan is pleased at her wonderful deliverance does not half express her feelings, and she and Mr. Flanigan are loud in their praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and of Mr. Dale for recommending this wonderful remedy to them.

The fact that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured Mrs. Flanigan of such a severe case of dropsy, after the doctors had given her up, has made them the most talked-of remedy ever known in White county.

Optimism.

When the optimist was dispossessed and thrown, along with his household impedimenta, into the cold street, he chuckled furiously.

"Why do you laugh, my friend?" inquired a passerby.

"Because I have just now been emancipated from toil," replied the optimist. "For years my life has been one long struggle to keep the wolf from the door. But now that I have been deprived of the door, I am no longer compelled to toil. Sweet, indeed, are the uses of adversity."

Then the optimist walked off, whistling gayly, into the sunshine.—New York Sun.

May Chicks.

Of all months in the north May is pre-eminently the best for hatching chicks with hens, writes J. H. Davis in the Poultry Tribune. The incubator and brooder plays an important part earlier in the season when early hatched birds are desired as market poultry. But during a three years' residence in Ohio, the best birds I raised in Polish, Hamburgs, Plymouth Rocks and Rhode Island Reds, were hatched in May. My incubator Plymouth Rocks, hatched in March, were marketed at twelve weeks of age, so I had no chance of knowing what they were when grown.

All my May chicks were incubator hatched and brooder raised, and they made vigorous growth and were beauties by the time winter came. May is the best month to hatch Polish, Houdans of any of the non-sitters. The chicks of the non-sitting breeds are very sensitive to cold and are easily chilled and die. But when hatched in May, when the weather becomes settled and warm, they grow fast and there is little mortality except such as is usual— that is, the weaklings die off, whether hatched with hens or incubators. I will say here that my brooder chicks always made a better average than the hen hatched chicks, and the average mortality being much less in the brooder flock than with those with hens.

If you hatch with hens, good nests, good eggs and good attention are the requisites for a start. Whitewash the nests inside, put in a few inches of earth, then sprinkle in plenty of sulphur, (no, use insect powder.—Ed.) then put in your straw or chaff and you are ready to start. Do not make the nest too deep, but rather shallow, since in a deep, round nest the eggs pile on top of each other and get broken. Sprinkle the hen once a week with insect powder, but do not disturb her. As often as possible, when she is off the nest, look to see if any eggs are broken, and if so, wash them with warm water, wipe dry and get the hen back on the nest as soon as possible. It is best to set several hens at the same time if possible; then divide the chicks among half the hens and reset the rest.

For twenty-four hours after they hatch give no feed, then provide shallow drinking pans, fixed so the chicks will not get wet, and give them water and an allowance of bread crumbs, cracker crumbs or corn bread. Keep up this diet for a week or more, when pin-headed oatmeal—the old-fashioned oatmeal—may be added to the ration. Plenty of corn bread, oatmeal, water and lettuce will keep them growing right along. Don't neglect the lettuce. Plant a big patch of it, nothing is better for the chicks or for fowls confined in yards. For the chicks cut the lettuce fine with a pair of shears and feed it often. They will eat it greedily; see that they have a daily supply all through the season.

Dairy Items.

"The higher the temperature of the cream at churning the poorer the quality of butter," is coming to be an accepted principle of butter making. It is therefore of no use for a man to use a churn that can churn only at high temperatures, like some of the whirlwind and cyclone churns now being so extensively advertised. Low temperatures for churning are the only ones that should be recognized.

At the Ontario Experiment Station butter churned into granules like clover seed contained an average of 11.15 per cent of moisture; perfect granular butter contained 11.44 per cent; large granular butter contained 10.86 per cent, and butter churned into grains like corn had an average of 11.57 per cent of moisture. This should set at rest the claim of some that the amount of water in butter is naturally from 15 to 20 per cent, as seems to be the claim in some of the English and Irish courts.

Poultry Briefs.

One poultry raiser says that while the care of chicks and the feeding have much to do with the mortality, yet in his mind the greatest cause of mortality is lack of stamina in the breeding stock. He certainly has hold of a truth, but his statement of it must be modified to be generally accepted. Given ordinary care and full protection from lice and animals of prey his statement is near the truth. But, with the protection absent, there is no room for comparison. The writer of this has known a couple of cats to butcher a whole coop ful of half-grown chicks that had all the stamina imaginable.

Do not delay to put in some forage crop for the poultry if you expect to keep them confined this summer and have a yard large enough to divide and give chance for the plants to develop. Try some rape. The seed costs little and can be secured of any first-class nurseryman. The writer has tried it and knows that it will pay. The man that writes about the cultivation of rape will tell you that the ground should be well-prepared. But this is not always necessary. The writer once sowed rape in his poultry yard, preparing a part of the ground and merely scattering seed over the other soil, which was virgin and had never been disturbed. The results astonished him. The rape on the unprepared ground did far better than that on the prepared ground. In this case the land was quite clayey and hard. There was, however, abundant moisture during the season.

"Can the sex of birds or animals be controlled?" is a subject just now claiming a good deal of attention. We notice that some of our contemporaries are inclined to scoff at the men that are trying to solve this question. To such we would say, "Remember that Darwin and Drummond and other great scientists have spent time on this problem and not entirely without results." The variations in the relative birth rates indicate that there are hidden principles that govern them. Just now one of the men working on the clues he has found promulgates the theory that hard conditions of life with meager food and care tends to a production of males, while an abundance of food and good surroundings and gentleness increase the number of females over the males. He claims to be proving this by keeping part of his fowls under hard conditions, and caring for and feeding the other birds in the best possible manner.

Some Forage Plants for Summer Feed

The pasturage tests of a number of annual forage crops made in 1898 were with a few exceptions duplicated in 1900, the intention being to note such variation as might be induced by a difference in climatic conditions or in the individual preference or aversion of animals for a certain feed. The crops tested were rye, oats and peas, Indian corn, millet, sorghum, Kafir corn, and cowpeas, as representing the annuals, also alfalfa and awnless brome-grass. Records were kept of the amount of pasturage afforded, and the effect of the feed upon the production of milk and butter fat.

The following are some average results for the two years: The crops giving the largest amounts of pasturage were rye and sorghum, Indian corn and millet gave less pasturage than any of the other annual forage plants. Alfalfa and awnless brome-grass gave the least pasturage of any, the former affording considerably more than the latter. It must be borne in mind, however, that the annuals may be pastured during only a certain period of each season, while the alfalfa and brome-grass furnish feed early and late. Cowpeas and alfalfa increased most largely the yield of milk and butter fat. Next to these came rye, oats and peas, sorghum, Kafir corn and awnless brome-grass.

Cowpeas produced an actually greater quantity of milk and butter fat from a given area of land than any other crop. A comparison was made of the amount of feed produced and the effect upon the yield of milk and butter fat when certain crops were pastured and when they were cut and fed. The crops so tested were alfalfa, sorghum, and Indian corn. In the case of each of these, from two to three times as much feed was procured from a given area of land when the crop was cut and fed as when it was pastured. The same tests indicated that the average daily production of milk and butter fat was greater for the same feed when it was pastured than when cut and fed. This on an average amounted to 1.17 times greater butter fat production from the pastured than from the soiled crop.—T. L. Lyon, Nebraska Experiment Station.

Certificated Dairies.

Certificated dairies are among the latest developments of municipal life, says "London Dairy." The town council of Plymouth leads the way, at the instance of Mr. J. A. Bellamy, who induced the council to pass the following resolution by thirty-four votes to fifteen: "That the medical officer of health be authorized to issue annual certificates to those dairy farmers both within and without the borders of the borough, who, being suppliers of milk, cream or butter to the inhabitants of Plymouth, express themselves willing to permit the inspection of their farms by the medical officer of health whenever he shall think fit. That such certificates be granted only to such dairy farmers whose dairies, cowsheds, premises, and farms generally are in a thoroughly sanitary condition, and whose milk carts, cans, and all other plant appertaining to their business shall satisfy the requirements of the medical officer of health. That a list of dairy farmers to whom certificates shall have been granted be advertised for the information of the Plymouth public every three months, and that all other details as to the carrying of this scheme into effect be left to the sanitary committee."

An outbreak of typhoid fever in the town gave rise to Mr. Bellamy's idea, and if it has the effect of preventing a similar calamity no one will have a right to complain. Yet it is not at all clear that the power to issue certificates will relieve the town of all possible taint of infection, and we are disposed to question the wisdom of sending a medical officer of health hither and thither, when a large town's supply of milk is necessarily drawn from a wide circle both within and without his jurisdiction. The power to issue implies a power to withdraw a certificate, but there is, we imagine, no intention to prohibit the sale of milk from uncertificated dairies, or those whose certificates have been cancelled. Voluntary measures of this kind may possibly contribute to the purity of the milk supply, but we confess not to view the proposal with much hopefulness.

Examine carefully all small seeds, such as clover and timothy, before buying, to make sure that numerous weed seeds are not being smuggled in.

It is claimed that alcohol can be made from sorghum pulp—the refuse from the sorghum mill.

An Oakland, Cal., man has been granted a divorce from his wife on the ground that she was addicted to smoking cigarettes.

New Born Foal.

The proper care and management of the new born foal is of great importance just at present, for it is easily seen that horses are to be worth high prices for many years to come, so that every possible foal should be saved. A few years ago many farmers considered foals actual nuisances, but that is changed and we are now glad that the youngsters get a warm welcome as they did of yore. It is often the case that a brood mare proves a poor milker and her owner is at a loss to know what would be the best food for her foal. If the proper food be not provided the foal grows up stunted in form and size and the possible profit is lost. For foals that have lost their mothers or for those that have poor milking dams cow's milk is the best food at first. This milk is less sweet than that of the mare, hence should be sweetened with a little sugar, but not diluted with water. At first half a pint of milk four or five times daily will be enough for good results, but as the colt grows stronger the amount may be increased gradually until the foal is getting all he will take. If the milk disagrees with his stomach then it is a good plan to add lime water to each mess of milk in the proportion of one tablespoonful to each pint of milk. This tends to keep the milk sweet, but if constipation is present the first step should be to give the foal a dose of castor oil in milk to clear the irritating matters from the intestinal track. The proper dose is from two to four tablespoonfuls for a foal from two to four weeks old, and after the physic operates no other medicine will be needed unless the foal has been suffering from scours, in which case ten grains of subnitrate of bismuth should be given three or four times daily, according to the severity of the case, until scouring ceases, which it will speedily do under this treatment. When the hand-fed foal reaches the age of four weeks other food should be added to the cow's milk, and for this purpose nothing is better than oil meal or flaxseed jelly. A half pint of the meal is about the right amount to give a young foal twice daily, but when the jelly is used it may be given three times daily, and will keep the bowels in good order. The jelly is made by pouring two quarts of cold water upon one cupful of whole flaxseed and allowing it to soak for twenty-four hours, when a jelly will have formed. In addition to the above foods a foal should be early accustomed to eating grain, and for this reason a box should be placed where the colt can get at it and not the mare, and this box should be kept filled with equal parts of ground oats and bran. When foal is four months old the sweet milk may be replaced by skim milk and the ground oats by crushed oats, and the foal will have commenced to eat a little grass. When the mare is a poor nurse, having a small supply of milk for her foal, she may be made to give more milk by proper feeding of milk-forming foods. Of these there is nothing superior to green grass, but where this does not suffice she may be encouraged in milk flow by the feeding of such foods as bran and oats, and where her foal is to be a show beast, the bran and ground oats along with cut hay may be made into slop with milk. Flaxseed or even cotton seed meal will also be found useful in stimulating a flow of milk, but great care must always be taken to change the mare's food very gradually, else it will be likely to injuriously affect the digestion of the foal. See to it that the young foal is dropped in a clean-bedded box stall and that its belly and navel are at once washed with a 5 per cent solution of some effective disinfectant, such as creolin or lysol. The washing of the navel should be repeated twice daily for a week, or until every raw spot has disappeared, for where this is done there will be no danger of loss from navel or joint disease, which are caused by the entrance of filth germs by way of the open umbilical vein in the raw navel cord. Avoid letting the foal follow the mare to work or allowing it to suck when mare is warm and sweaty.

Poultry statistics are valuable if they are collected carefully and have in them no deceptive qualities. We lack data for observations on fowls more than on any other farm stock. We do not refer in this instance to the statistics of the national trade in poultry and eggs or in the production of birds in the whole country. The statistics to which we refer are those that may be collected by every raiser of poultry regarding his own flock. Such statistics should show a good many things and should be in tabulated form, so they may be readily read and as readily compared from year to year. Among the items should be the number of fowls in the flock, males and females, number of hens set, number of chicks hatched, number of eggs placed under hens, number of fertile eggs or percentage of fertile eggs, chicks hatched, percentage raised to maturity, percentage of deaths from diseases or accidents, and so on through a long list of things that might be mentioned. The successful man must have a mind capable of analyzing the facts he finds around him. Without the data mentioned a man or woman works in the dark.

Fields of Wheat in Which the Shocks Were So Thick It Was Almost Impossible to Drive Between Them.

To the Editor: A gentleman from Duluth made a trip through a portion of Western Canada last summer and writing of what he saw, says:

"Wheat, for instance, will average twenty-five or thirty bushels to the acre. I saw shocks so thick in the field that it would be almost impossible to drive between them. Winters, it is said are longer than near Duluth, but the Japan current, warm chinook winds and dry atmosphere make the winters comparatively mild."

Thousands of such testimonials are to be had from settlers who have taken advantage of the low-priced lands of Western Canada. During the present year new districts will be opened up in the Saskatchewan valley and advantage should be taken of this at once. Information can be had from any agent of the government, whose advertisement appears elsewhere in your columns. Yours truly,

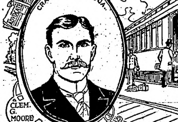
FOR SYSTEMIC CATARRH

Peculiar to Summer Pe-ru-na Gives Prompt and Permanent Relief.



Clem G. Moore, Editor of the Advocate-Democrat of Crawfordsville, Ga., writes the Peruna Medicine Company as follows:

Gentlemen—"After four years of intense suffering, caused by systemic catarrh, which I contracted while editing, and traveling for my paper, I have been greatly relieved by the use of Peruna. I gave up work during these years of torture, tried various remedies and many doctors, but all the permanent relief came from the use of Peruna. My trouble was called indigestion, but it was catarrh all through my system, and a few bottles of Peruna made me feel like another person, noting the improvement after I had used the first bottle. Peruna is undoubtedly the best catarrh remedy ever compounded.—Clem G. Moore.

Captain Percy W. Moss, Paragould, Ark., says: "I think Peruna is undoubtedly the finest and surest catarrh cure ever prepared, and it has taken but two bottles to convince me of this fact."

Judge Wm. T. Zenor, of Washington, D. C., writes from 213 N. Capital Street, Washington, D. C.:

"I take pleasure in saying that I can cheerfully recommend the use of Peruna as a remedy for catarrhal trouble and a most excellent tonic for general conditions."—Wm. T. Zenor.

It is officially admitted that Minister Loomis will not return to Venezuela. There are two reasons for this decision. In the first place, Mr. Loomis has suffered in health at his uncongenial post, and in the second place, the president is not disposed to expose him again to the merciless attacks he has suffered in Venezuela as a result of the execution of the orders of the state department.

AFTER HIS SCALP

CUBANS WOULD LIKE A NEW GOVERNOR.

Reported That They Will Try to Throw the Responsibility for Their Misunderstanding of the Platt Amendment Upon Gen. Wood—They Want a Governor Who Will Be More Conciliatory to the Constitution Makers—Platt Amendment Will Probably Be Adopted.

Washington, June 9.—The Cuban situation was again discussed at the cabinet meeting yesterday. Secretary Root presented several telegrams from Gov. Gen. Wood conveying the information that the purport of Secretary Root's letter regarding the Platt amendment had been communicated to several members of the Cuban convention without waiting for the translation and formal presentation.

Gen. Wood said the Cubans were disappointed over the refusal of this government to accept their interpretation of the Platt amendment, but they believed the convention would, by a close vote, be able to comply with the conditions and pass the Platt amendment as adopted by congress. Secretary Root is much annoyed by the misrepresentation of his position by the Cuban commission and the claim that he

of the Platt amendment which they embodied in their constitution. It is stated with positiveness that the Cubans never received any such interpretations from responsible officials in Washington, and it is reported from Havana that the Cubans will now try to throw the responsibility upon Gov. Gen. Wood and make it appear that he consented to their form of the amendment. The purpose of such a move is clear to the administration. It is simply another effort to compel the president to recall Gen. Wood and name a new governor general who will be more conciliatory to the Cuban constitution makers. This effort will fail.

There can be no further efforts at conciliation and explanation. The Cuban convention must adopt the Platt amendment just as it stands to secure any recognition for their constitution in Washington.

CUBANS BECOMING "RILED."

They declare that they will not stand the brunt of the business and allow the anti-Platt delegates to boast that they voted against the amendment.

New Haven, Conn., June 9.—It is announced here that the marriage of Mrs. Mary E. Lester, aged sixty-five years, and J. Trumbull Smith, aged seventy-five years, will take place in Westville, near here, in a week. They were lovers fifty years ago in Hartford, Conn., and were to be married. Mrs. Lester spent her summers at Branford Point and her winters at Hartford, where she met Smith. There was a talk over old times, and they became reconciled. The Rev. Mr. Sexton, pastor of the Westville Episcopal church, son-in-law of Mrs. Lester, will perform the marriage ceremony.

DEATH CHEATS THE LAW.

Only One Bank Robber Left to Serve His Sentence.

Toronto, Ont., June 9. — Of the three men, Fred Lee Rice, Thomas Jones and Frank Rutledge, extradited from Chicago to stand trial for the robbery of a bank at Aurora, Ont., Rice is the only living survivor of the trio to serve out the twenty-one years' imprisonment to which he was sentenced yesterday morning. Two tragedies have put Jones and Rutledge beyond the reach of the law. Jones died from bullet wounds received in a desperate attempt at escape from the officers who were transferring the prisoners from the court house to the jail last Tuesday, and Rutledge committed suicide yesterday by jumping from the gallery in the jail to the stone court thirty feet below.

AMERICAN BIBLIOGRAPHY.

British Museum Is Adopting It as a Model.

New York, June 9.—A dispatch to the Journal and Advertiser from London says America's art of Bibliography is to be adopted in England. The Bibliographical Society of London has written a request to the Grolier Club of New York for its co-operation to that end. Hitherto the Bibliographical society has been regarded as infallible. Its rules were not to be disputed. But two Americans, Beverly C. New and A. H. Bierstadt, who were simply book lovers, compiled a Bibliography for the Grolier club of English writers from Langland to Withers. The British museum finds that the work is indispensable and offers it as a model.

ROOT WILL BE SUPREME.

Civil Government of the Philippines Will Be Under the Secretary of War.

Washington, June 8. — The new civil government to be established in the Philippines is receiving the consideration of the president and the secretary of war. It will differ very little from what was first intended, as there will be a governor for the archipelago and a legislative council and other officers. This government will have control of all civil affairs, but it will be under the war power to the extent of being directed by the secretary of war. There will be a nice distinction as to the authority of the general commanding the troops in the Philippines and the governor to be appointed under the civil government. No official declaration has been made as to which will be the supreme authority, but it is known that the secretary of war will be supreme. While it is not the intention to conduct the government of the Philippines under the Spooner law, that law will be taken as sanctioning what is to be done. The new government will be similar to that which existed for a short time in the early days of New Mexico. There was a civil governor appointed by the president and a commanding general of the army. Both had their functions in preserving the peace and controlling the affairs of the territory.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

Considered by the Industrial Commission.

Washington, June 8.—The industrial commission at its session yesterday considered the tariff question with incidental reference to trusts, the witnesses being Congressman Robert W. Taylor of Ohio and Dr. George G. Gunton, president of the New York Institute of Social Economies. Mr. Taylor took the position that any discussion in congress of the tariff at this time would have a damaging effect upon the country. He said the Dingley law was the most equitable tariff law the United States had ever had. He took a decided position against trusts and said that they are not fostered by the protective tariff. Mr. Taylor also said that he believed in the principal of reciprocity, but that he did not indorse any of the recently negotiated reciprocity treaties. Dr. Gunton devoted himself especially to replying to an argument recently made before the commission by Mr. Edward Atkinson for freer trade. Dr. Gunton said that the freedom contended by opponents of the tariff is analagous to the freedom of a savage, a freedom which, if indulged in too freely, not only brings injury to others, but ruin to himself.

PRESIDENT CONTINUES HOPEFUL.

Slight Improvement in Mrs. McKinley's Condition Noticed.

Washington, June 8. — The president continues hopeful of the outcome of Mrs. McKinley's illness. More than this cannot be said. There was a slight improvement yesterday morning and no set-back during the day, but likewise no gain. One favorable circumstance is that Mrs. McKinley continues to sleep more than during the earlier stages of her illness and last night rested fairly comfortable. The president, through Secretary Cortelyou, formally notified the Buffalo exposition management that he would not be able to attend the exposition on the 13th inst., as had been planned, but added that he hoped to be able to do so at some later date not yet designated.

Chicago, June 8.—S. M. Smith of Rogers' Park caught a big bass in the Crystal river near Waukegan a week ago. In its stomach was found a woman's watch with the inscription "T. B. to E. M., 1900." The story of the watch became known and Emma Tallson of Waukegan, came to Rogers Park, described the watch, and it was restored to her. Miss Tallson says that she and her brother were rowing in the Crystal river and that in changing seats the watch fell into the water, and presumably was gobbled up by the bass, in whose stomach it was found.

Lincoln, to have the body placed as in the former monument, under a huge block of cement, where it will be out of reach of any attempt at molestation.

SHERIFF HAD NERVE

STANDS OFF A MOB AND SAVES HIS PRISONER.

One Man Killed and Two Wounded by the Sheriff and His Posse—Prisoner Taken to Another County for Safekeeping—Governor Orders Out Militia and the Arrival of the Troops Averts Further Trouble—Governor Issues a Proclamation Commanding the People to Disperse.

Carrollton, Ga., June 9.—The nerve of Sheriff Joseph Merrill yesterday upheld the law of the state and saved the life of a negro from a mob. In protecting the negro, who was saved from the gallows only a few hours before through the efforts of his lawyers, one life was lost and two men wounded. The arrival of the state militia averted threatened trouble last night and at 9 o'clock a special train bearing the negro was speeding toward Atlanta under guard. The man killed in attacking the jail was George Bennett of Carrollton, and the wounded men are Thomas S. Word, father of the murdered boy, and an unknown man, presumably a farmer.

Williams, the negro who caused the trouble, was tried and found guilty of murdering Otis Word Jan. 1, 1901, and sentenced to be hanged yesterday. He was yesterday morning refused a new trial by Judge Harris, but his attorneys filed a bill of exceptions and carried the case to the supreme court.

A large crowd of people had come to town to witness the hanging, and when it was learned that an appeal had been taken to the supreme court, delaying the execution, there was much excited talk, which crystalized soon after in the formation of a mob. At noon the mob made an assault on the jail. They battered down the outside door, despite the warnings of the sheriff, and entered the building. They made a demand on the sheriff for the key to the negro's cell, but were refused. The mob then advanced upon the sheriff and his deputies. They were told to stop or they would be fired on, but the order was not obeyed. As they advanced down the corridor toward the sheriff the Order Was Given to Fire.

Bennett fell, dying almost instantly. Thomas Word, the father of Williams' victim, who was in the front of the mob, was badly shot, as was also an unknown man. The unexpected fight of the sheriff and his little posse frightened the mob and they retreated outside the jail. Here they broke and ran and were soon divided into little groups discussing the event. Sheriff Merrill at once consulted Judge Harris and it was decided to call upon Gov. Candler for aid. The governor was communicated with by telephone and said he would send two companies from Atlanta as soon as they could be assembled.

During the afternoon the mob telephoned the situation to friends in the adjoining towns of Villa Rica and Temple and made an appeal for more men to get possession of the negro. This was communicated to Gov. Candler, also, and the governor soon wired a proclamation to the people of the county. It was read from the steps of the courthouse at 4 o'clock by the mayor. The governor commanded the people to disperse and said the entire military and civil forces of the state would be used to enforce order if necessary. The reading of the proclamation apparently had a good effect, as many people were seen to mount their horses and leave town. The sheriff then decided to take the prisoner out of the county for safe keeping. The Atlanta militia, under command of Maj. Barker, arrived last night and escorted the negro and Sheriff Merrill to the train, which was soon speeding toward Atlanta.

SHOOTING AFFRAY.

Two Killed, One Fatally and One Seriously Wounded.

Houston, Tex., June 9. — A shooting affray occurred here yesterday in which Thomas Payne and L. G. Echols were killed, J. B. Perkins was fatally and Deve Echols badly wounded. Payne's son was on trial and the two Echols had been summoned as witnesses. The men met down town and after a few words the shooting began. Perkins was a brother-in-law of Payne, and he and L. G. Echols fired at about the same time. Echols' bullet struck Payne, and at about the same instant Perkins shot and killed Echols. Dave Echols opened fire on Perkins and on young Payne. Two bullets struck Perkins and a wound in the groin will probably prove fatal. Perkins wounded Dave Echols in the arm and amputation will be necessary. The younger Payne was not hurt. The street was crowded at the time of the shooting but no one save those directly involved were hurt. Every bullet fired struck the mark with the exception of one which young Payne fired and which struck his father, who was probably dead at the time.

MRS. M'KINLEY'S CONDITION.

Stated Emphatically That She Is No Worse.

Washington, June 9. — Dr. Rixey, when asked regarding the result of the microscopic examination of the patient's blood, said he had nothing to say on the subject, and that if anything was given out it would be after a consultation of the three physicians. He said there had been no unfavorable developments during the day. Some apprehension has been felt as to the possible unfavorable effect of the warm weather, but a heavy rain fell yesterday, bringing lower temperature, and much satisfaction was expressed at the White House at the temporary relief. Mrs. McKinley ordinarily suffers little from the heat of the summer at Washington, but the possible effect of it at this time, in view of her low vitality and the necessity for guarding against anything in the nature of a sinking spell or a drain upon her strength, caused some anxiety. The complaint from which Mrs. McKinley suffered in San Francisco is not entirely checked, but it is said to be under better control now. Despite some reports to the contrary, it is stated emphatically at the White House that Mrs. McKinley has not grown any worse.

AWFUL MASSACRE

MANY CATHOLIC PRIESTS AND CONVERTS KILLED IN SOUTHERN MONGOLIA.

BLOODY WORK OF PRINCE TUAN

Soldiers Under His Command Responsible for the Latest Outrages —Chinese Court Will Not Be Held Responsible, as it is Impossible to Suppress Lawlessness in That Section—Ministers Highly Elated Over Early Agreement on the Negotiations.

Pekin, June 18. — An Italian priest who has arrived here from Shensi confirms the report previously made by priests in Shansi in regard to the massacre of Roman Catholic clergymen in Southern Mongolia. He says that fifteen Belgian priests, with a number of converts, were massacred at Niangtao-liang, in Southern Mongolia, several weeks ago by soldiers under Prince Tuan, Duke Lan and Gen. Tung Fu Hsiang.

The Belgian minister is not inclined to hold the court responsible for this crime. He says the district where the massacres occurred is the rendezvous of many former officials who have been degraded or sentenced to banishment. Those officials are exercising high military power for the time being, and it is impossible for the Chinese government to suppress them. The ministers have practically agreed on all the chief points in regard to the Payment of the Indemnity.

All are willing to accept the American proposition of an indemnity of 450,000,000 taels, with interest at 4 per cent, the bonds to be issued at par, and an annual payment of 18,000,000 taels to the sinking fund. Several of the ministers have telegraphed to their home government in regard to the matter, and are awaiting replies before making a final announcement of the agreement. The ministers have also determined the sources from which the revenue shall be raised. It would seem, therefore, that all the articles of the protocol have been settled satisfactorily except the new regulations in regard to modifying commercial treaties, which may not be necessary after all. The ministers are elated at the termination of their trying experiences during the negotiations.

HER NERVE FAILS NOT.

With Wonderful Composure Lulu Prince-Kennedy Hears Dread Word —"Guilty."

Kansas City, June 18.—Lulu Prince-Kennedy was found guilty of murder in the second degree for having killed her husband, Philip H. Kennedy, on Jan. 10 last. Her punishment was fixed at ten years in the penitentiary. When the verdict was read this remarkable twenty-year-old prisoner whose cool, indifferent manner has for five months baffled the jail officials who have had her in charge, looked straight ahead of her. She neither burst out crying nor moved a muscle. Later she expressed interest, but nothing more, in the formal calling by the court clerk of the cases pending against her father, C. W. Prince, and her brothers, Bert and Will Prince, who are charged with conspiring to kill Kennedy.

VERY ELUSIVE NEGRO.

Pursuers Hot on the Trail of Foster's Murderer.

Shreveport, La., June 18.—The search for Prince Edwards, the murderer of John Gray Foster, continues. There seems to be no doubt that the negro being pursued into Northeast Texas is the man wanted, but his course is so sinuous that it is extremely difficult to follow his trail. A telephone message received from Marshall, Tex., says that the searchers are working night and day. Great difficulty is experienced in extracting information from the negroes in the country through which Edwards is supposed to have passed. All is quiet at Benton. The sheriff has a large armed force in readiness and can put it in service at a moment's notice. The temper of the public has cooled considerably.

EX-GOV. PINGREE CRITICALLY ILL.

Physicians Hold a Midnight Consultation Over His Case.

London, June 18.—A consultation of physicians in former Gov. Pingree's room at midnight evidenced the acuteness of his illness. Every effort has been made to check the exhaustion from which he is suffering, and, while the physicians declare that Mr. Pingree has fairly held his own during the day, they are unable to say that he is anywise improved. The question now is whether his natural physical strength will enable him to withstand the exhausting strain of the last few days. That Mr. Pingree's condition is critical cannot be denied, and his physicians do not disguise their apprehension, though they are still hopeful of a favorable result.

Kennedy, accused of the murder of "Dolly" Reynolds, reported to Judge Newburger yesterday morning that it could not agree on a verdict. The judge at once discharged the jury. It is said the first ballot stood four for conviction and eight for acquittal. This is Dr. Kennedy's third trial for this crime.

Ever since the burning of Fred Alexander the negroes of Leavenworth have been in an ugly mood, and conservative men say that the race feeling stirred up at that time may break out at any time. The police are doing everything possible to kill the feeling and are acting with the officers at Fort Leavenworth. The negroes who bought revolvers have been arrested and are being held.

Noiseless baseball, as distinguished from the game played largely with the lungs, may not be so far distant as it seems to many despondent lovers of a sportsmanlike game. A graduate publication, representing a well-known college, declares that the adoption of a noiseless game would do more good to that institution than winning the championship. The campaign motto of a baseball nine ought to be, "Give an opponent every opportunity to do his best—and then beat him!" A rowdy may resort to barbaric yells as a means of defeating an antagonist, but a gentleman is bound to refrain from debasing methods of gaining a triumph.

All shining buttons, buckles and ornaments are to be dispensed with in the new military uniform for German forces. A grayish brown cloth will be used for coat, trousers and cap. War without glitter will be less fascinating as the years go by, and that is well. Nothing ought to disguise its real significance. Only the patriotic sense of duty will make men engage in war when it shall have been stripped of its romance, and when its deadly purpose shall be written in every feature. If there were no men to bury, no bills to pay, war would be a popular resource of excitement seekers; but graves and debts are accompaniments which mock at romantic theories about campaigns and battles.

BIG LOSS OF LIFE

FERRYBOAT CRASHES INTO A STEAMER LADEN WITH PASSENGERS.

ONE HUNDRED FIND WATERY GRAVE

Wild Excitement Which Prevailed Causes a Difference of Opinion as to the Extent of the Disaster—Variously Estimated at Between Twenty-Five and a Hundred Lives Lost — Each Captain Lays the Blame on the Other—Steamer Captain Arrested for Criminal Negligence.

New York, June 16. — The wooden side-wheeler Northfield, which has been in the service of the Staten Island Ferry company for the past thirty-eight years, was rammed last night by the steel-hulled propeller Mauch Chunk, used as a ferry boat by the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The collision occurred just off the Staten Island ferry slip at the foot of Whitehall street, and in less than twenty minutes afterward the Northfield, which was crowded with passengers, sank to the outer end of the Spanish line pier in the East river. The Mauch Chunk, which was badly damaged, landed two dozen passengers who were aboard her. Over a hundred passengers of the sunken Northfield were dragged out of the water by people along shore and the crews of the fleet of river tugs, which promptly responded to the ferry boat's call for help. A few of the Northfield's passengers were hurt in the accident and the police believe that some lives were lost. Capt. Daniel Gully of the tugboat Mutual, who saw the ferry boats says that immediately after the collision between twenty-five and thirty of the passengers leaped into the water and that many of those perished. Capt. Gully also declares that he is sure over a hundred of the Northfield's passengers were drowned. The captains of the other tug boats who were early on the scene, however, are inclined to think that the disaster was not so serious as regards to loss of life. Thus far no dead bodies have been recovered. The reason for such a difference of opinion as to the extent of the disaster is that the wildest excitement prevailed on the Northfield. The tug Mutual saved in all about seventy-five persons from the Northfield, and the tugs Unity and Arrow saved between them 150 persons. Two policemen of the old slip station claim to have rescued nearly thirty people between them. As soon as the crowd which had followed the sinking ferryboat along the river front were able to render any aid they responded with a will, and in many cases men sprang into the water.

To Save Life.

The greatest service was rendered by the tug boats, which, as soon as it was possible, closed around the Northfield and made a bridge to the Spanish line pier, and men and women clambered over the tugs to the shore. The swift-running flood tide and the question of which boat had the right of way was the cause of the disaster. Capt. Abraham Johnson was in charge of the Northfield and Capt. S. C. Griffin was in command of the Mauch Chunk. Each lays the blame of the collision to the other. Capt. Johnson of the Northfield was arrested about midnight on a charge of criminal negligence. He is held without bail and will be arraigned to-day. Capt. Griffin of the Mauch Chunk went to his home in Jersey City not long after the accident occurred. Officers of the Jersey Central railway gave assurances that Capt. Griffin would make his appearance in police court to answer to a technical charge of manslaughter.

NAVAL OFFICER IN DISGRACE.

Found Guilty by a Court-Martial of Scandalous Conduct.

Washington, June 16. — The loss of ten numbers in his grade and reduction of his pay to furlough pay for two years and to be publicly reprimanded is the sentence imposed by court-martial upon Capt. Robert E. Impey, at present stationed at the Mare Island navy yard. The captain was charged with scandalous conduct in having represented to a dentist that his bill must be reduced because it required the approval of the treasury officers, whereas this was a purely personal matter. Secretary Long has addressed a letter to Capt. Impey advising him of his approval of so much of the sentence as directed a reprimand and a reduction in rank, but stating that the part of the sentence recommending that Capt. Impey should be placed on furlough for two years was remitted, "not because of any clemency which you are regarded as meriting, but for the reason that the department does not consider that the interests of the navy will be advanced by permitting you to remain in idleness for two years when the services of all officers are required on active duty."

ST. PAUL SWAMPED.

Severest Storm That Has Ever Visited the City.

St. Paul, June 16. — With hustling wind and deluge of water a cloudburst swooped upon the city yesterday afternoon about 2:30, the severest storm in many years, a fury of force like the destructive storm that leveled New Richmond, June 12, 1899. In twenty minutes, driven by a southwest gale of thirty-eight miles an hour, there was a precipitation of 1.02 inches, an uncommon downpour, Observer Lyons says, for so short a time. Fierce flashes of lightning and crashes of thunder followed in rapid succession. The wind howled through the streets and the elements were in an uproar for nearly half an hour. The three elements of electricity, wind and rain caused considerable damage in the city, although not of a serious nature. One man was slightly injured, houses were ignited, trees were blown down or broken, sidewalks were torn up, cellars flooded and the street car service was checked by a number of cars being disabled. Camp Northcott was all but wrecked, and there were many narrow escapes from serious injury under the falling tents. Gravest peril of all was that which befell the crowds in bathing at Harriet island, where hundreds were snatched from a surging of water like a tidal wave.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

Among the visitors at the Farmers' Review office last week was L. R. Bryant, Secretary of the Illinois State Horticultural Society. He brought with him some samples of the apples he has had in cold storage since last fall. It was the Seventeenth of May, yet the apples were as hard and fresh looking as the day they came off the tree, and their color was excellent. Mr. Bryant said that they had been held all through the winter at about 32 degrees. Of this two things may be said; one is that more apples should be put into cold storage warehouses, to lessen the glut in the fall, and another is that the Willow Twig is a most excellent apple for that purpose. We doubt if there be any other apple that will come out better in the spring or sell more readily.

The folly of planting some kinds of trees in the fall in some of our northern latitudes is frequently well illustrated by the results of that practice. Recently the writer of this had occasion to look over a large mass of shrubbery that was planted last fall, the planters insisting that that was the proper time to plant. This spring at least two-thirds of the plantation is dead and most of the shrubs will have to be pulled up and replaced. The advice of our state horticultural societies should be taken. The Illinois State Horticultural society has given the matter due consideration and has declared in favor of spring planting in all localities north of Springfield. In warmer regions fall planting is doubtless all right, especially where the winter supply of moisture is good.

The Illinois State Horticultural Society has for a number of years conducted sub-experiment stations with more or less success. These stations number, we believe, eight, and are scattered over the state. The object of their existence is to try the same fruits in different parts of the state. Every new fruit, whether tree, cane, or bush, is sent to each of the stations. After several years it is easy to approximate its value for the locality in which it is being tried. We say approximate, for even trying a fruit in eight or nine parts of the state will not prove positively what it might do in yet another location other than the eight. Not only the climate but the soils must be considered, and the combinations of soil are almost infinite. The greatest difficulty is to get men that will properly run these sub-stations, and this difficulty is increased by the fact that little money is available for that purpose. A man is paid a rental of about $5 per acre per year for the land on his farm actually occupied by the experimental orchard or small fruits. This land is at the present time not often in excess of three acres. Then the owner gets perhaps $25 per year for taking care of the plantation, and the trees and plants are furnished to him free. If the man be a horticulturist by instinct he will carry on the work from year to year and will get results. Some of the caretakers, however, weary of well-doing in a short time and the trial orchard is neglected. There is also another disturbing factor—namely, death. We instance J. V. Cotta, who was a most thorough horticulturist and had charge of a trial station located on his farm. When death came the whole work there was interrupted, and it now seems likely that the trial orchard will cease to be, as the land will pass to heirs and the land under the orchard is not owned by the State Society. Probably the state will ultimately provide money for the purchase of land to be used for such stations, but the funds of the State Society will not, at the present time at least warrant investment in real estate.

Kansas Gypsum and Its Value.

Many people will be surprised to know that gypsum is found in Kansas in large quantities. In his address before the State Board of Agriculture Erasmus Haworth stated that Kansas ranks second in the Union as a producer of gypsum and the value of its marketed product. Kansas gypsum is of two distinct varieties, which differ from each other in origin and in method of manufacture. The most abundant variety is the ordinary rock gypsum, which exists in broad layers, interstratified with limestone and shale so that in every respect it is a genuine rock. It is this form of gypsum which is so abundant in the vicinity of Blue Rapids and on the south side of the Hill river opposite Solomon. It also occurs near the little town of Hope and many places south of it, from Sumner line to the state line and last but not least to the southwest in Barber county. Here it occurs as immense masses of stratified rock, measuring in some places 30 feet or more in thickness. It also caps the hills in the rough country to the southwest of Medicine Lodge. This rock gypsum in the various places named is exceptionally pure and contains only about one or two per cent of foreign matter. It is equal to any gypsum in the world for the manufacture of the highest grades of plaster of Paris and when properly mixed with efficient retarders makes as high grade cement plaster as can be found on the markets of Europe or America. Another variety of gypsum known in Kansas and elsewhere is pulverient in form. It is found near or at the surface of the ground in wet or marshy places and is mixed with more or less earthy matter, such as soil, clay and sand.

Experience shows that it is profitable to apply gypsum to some kinds of soil. Last year Forest Savage of Lawrence applied a few hundred pounds of gypsum to a wheat field. The vigorous growth and healthy green color of this portion testified to the benefit derived from the condition of the gypsum. Bro. Haworth thinks that the productiveness of Kansas soil can be greatly increased, particularly in the eastern part of the state where gumbo patches are common and hardpan is abundant. He was betraying no professional secret when he stated that many of the big packing houses used large quantities of ground gypsum to mix with other animal fertilizers. The farmers of the west are slow in getting around to commercial fertilizers, but when these materials can be had near at hand there is no reason why they may not be profitable.

Judging at Kansas City Show.

Frank D. Winn, secretary of the National Breeders' show and also of the organization representing Poland China, gives the following explanation of system of judging adopted by the managing committee on Poland Chinas at the Kansas City show this method to apply only of course to the Poland China breed: The four judges who will tie ribbons on the Polands at the Kansas City show are T. B. Hart of Illinois, J. M. Klover and J. C. Hendrick of Ohio and W. Z. Swallow of Iowa, who was substituted for W. H. McFadden, who could not serve on account of his official position with the American Poland China Record company. These gentlemen are all well known and have the confidence and esteem of breeders throughout the country, both as to their judgment and their honor. The managing committee does not believe that any one of these men would let any little personal feeling interfere with their best judgment in placing the awards, should there be any, yet there are always those exhibitors who imagine they will not get a fair deal on account of personal differences, etc., and to ease the minds of such men, we have adopted a method of judging which will make it almost impossible for any breeder to be injured without there are as many as two of the judges prejudiced against him. Two judges will work on each class with a referee to decide in case of a disagreement, and one judge will then of course be out on each class. The judges will be rotated, the referee changed each time as well as the man who is out. It can readily be seen that unless both of the judges on a class or one of the acting judges and the referee are disposed to be prejudiced and working against the same breeder, it will be impossible for him to get the worst of it. This method of judging was adopted for the great combined cattle shows at Kansas City this fall and in the opinion of the committee would be the most satisfactory that could be used for the Poland China hog exhibit. I am not informed as to the system that will be employed by the other breeds. The committee determined to go to the extra expense of the additional fourth judge to make it as fair and satisfactory to all exhibitors as possible, which it was thought would be appreciated by the breeders and be the cause of a larger and better exhibit.

Black Spanish.

The Black Spanish is one of the oldest varieties of domestic poultry. Their name has been identified with the industry for hundreds of years, and their practical worth on the farm has long been of much value. Their haughty bearing, large red comb and wattles, and the white face and lobes peculiar to the breed, contrasting with their glossy black plumage, render them most striking fowls. White-faced Black Spanish have long been favorably known for their exceptionally fine laying qualities. The oldest of the nonsitting varieties, they still maintain an unsurpassed record. The pullets are early layers, averaging 160 to 180 eggs per year, the hens beginning somewhat later after molting, but compensating for any loss of quantity by the increased size of the egg, while hens and pullets alike are well above the average for winter laying. Their eggs are large and white and of good flavor. Their white face is a distinguishing feature, and should be long, smooth, free from wrinkles, rising well over the eyes in an arched form, extending toward the back of the head and to the base of the beak, covering the cheeks and joining the wattles and ear lobes, the greater the depth of surface the better, and should be pure white in color. The color of plumage throughout is rich, glossy black, and any gray in plumage is considered a serious defect. Shanks and toes are blue, or dark leaden blue. Comb is single and bright red in color; wattles, bright red, except the inside of the upper part, which is white; earlobes, pure white. No standard weight is given for Black Spanish; they average in size that of the Leghorn and Andalusian.

A Southern writer says that at present a great many in the South are sending North for first class pigs, but owing to the fact that they are not willing to pay first class prices, are getting scrubs at scrub prices.

Does Sterilization Affect the Digestibility of Milk?

Since bacteriologists have taught us to look upon untreated cow's milk as a fruitful source of infection, especially dangerous to infants, it has become the universal practice among physicians to insist upon its being exposed to the prolonged influence of heat—i. e., sterilized. The too exclusive use of milk thus prepared has been condemned by some authorities, so that the question may still be regarded as open to discussion, says a British exchange. To determine the relative digestibility of fresh and sterilized milk, Jemma (La clinica medica Italiana) has undertaken a series of laboratory experiments, which show that under the influence of pepsin and hydrochloric acid fresh milk is more readily digested than sterilized milk, while the reverse takes place when the two fluids are subjected to the action of pancreatin. When acted upon by artificial gastric juice, sterilized milk produces a greater quantity of peptones during the first four hours than fresh milk, but after that period the latter proves to be the more easily digestible. Practically the same results were obtained on using labferment, pepsin, and hydrochloric acid. The action of labferment and pancreatin was more pronounced in the case of sterilized milk.

In a second series of researches the author set himself the task of determining the relative digestibility of sterilized milk, and of milk diluted with a 10 per cent solution of sugar of milk. In every instance the advantage was on the side of the diluted milk. The conclusions drawn by the author from these data are: 1. Milk submitted to the sterilizing action of heat shows no impairment of digestibility, which is superior to that of raw milk. 2. Milk that has been sterilized and diluted with a solution of sugar of milk is more easily digested than pure sterilized milk.

Alfalfa in the Hog Ration.

At the Oklahoma station alfalfa pasture, with and without the addition of grain, was studied with a number of pigs. Other forage crops were also tested, including sugar beets, cowpeas, sorghum, sweet potatoes and peanuts. During part of the tests the feeding stuffs were cut and fed; during the remainder of the time they were harvested by the pigs. These tests led to the following general conclusions: Alfalfa is excellent as pasture for hogs. Pigs will make some gain with no other food, excellent gains when fed grain on the alfalfa. Continuous pasturing will injure and may destroy the alfalfa. With rare exceptions, alfalfa should not be pastured the year it is sown. Sorghum also makes a fair pasture for hogs. Sowing cow-peas, planting peanuts or sweet potatoes, and allowing hogs to harvest the crop, giving them some grain in addition, reduces the cost of pork production. Sugar beets are much relished by any class of stock. The greater cost of growing them as compared with other crops makes it doubtful if they are an economical crop when used in large quantities.

Clean Milking Important.

One of the things "worth doing well" is milking the cows. Why a cow ought to be milked clean every time is too old a story and has too many arguments to back it up to make a lecture necessary every time it is mentioned. But its importance cannot be brought out too frequently, says Jersey Bulletin. It looks like a little thing to some men to slight a cow because she is a "tegious" milker; and it may be more convenient to leave a quart of strippings in the udder than to put up with the side-stepping and tail-swinging agitation of a "nervous critter"; but the owner of a good cow might better have a "hand" who will steal from him than one who doesn't milk the cows clean. He not only loses much of the richest milk—that is perhaps the least of the objections to such neglect—but the practice of leaving milk in the udder has a deteriorating influence on the capacity of the cow. The longer it goes on, the less milk she gives. And the small yield soon becomes chronic.

Toads As Medicine.

Out of the queer use of a common creature regarded as most potent in old-time medicine there came the most surprising and nearly the most important of inventions. Nearly every school boy knows that a toad can cause warts or make the cow give bloody milk, but not everybody knows that toads are also powerfully medicinal. It is a fact. Martin Luther says so. These are his very words: "Experience has proved the toad to be endowed with valuable qualities. If you run a stick through three toads, and, after having dried them in the sun, apply them to any pestilent humor, they draw out the poison, and the malady will disappear." Pope Adrian always carried a bag about his neck containing dried toad, pearl, coral, gum, tragacanth, smaragd and other articles of junk. It did him a power of good he said. It was all that kept him up. And lest you think that they only did that hundreds of years ago, I want to say here that when my father was a boy and suffered from quinsy they used to tie live frogs about his throat. The frogs nearly clawed the hide off. They did not cure the quinsy, but that's a detail.—Harvey Sutherland in Ainslee's.

An Army Corps Commander.

BENEFICENT GERMS

Not All Microbes Have Disease-Producing Power.

It is very much the fashion to regard every germ as possessed of disease-producing powers, but this is an error. Many germs are not only innocuous to us, but actually represent friendly microscopic particles, which may be utilized in the various processes relating to the body's welfare. It is now many years ago since Dr. Metchnikoff of the Pasteur Institute of Paris revealed the very extraordinary, but charming, theory of the wondrous part played by the white corpuscles, or leucocytes, of our blood in repelling germ invasion. Every white corpuscle (whereof there are millions in the blood of man) is a little living thing which is really independent of us. It can push its way through the walls of blood vessels and wander at its own sweet will through the tissues. It can attack and devour germs that have gained admittance to our frames, and when any injury occurs it may be seen in company with thousands of its neighbors coming to the rescue and seeking to ward off the effects and consequences of the lesion. Inflammation is marked by a tremendous outflow from the blood vessels into the tissues of these white blood cells, and one product of inflammation—matter or "pus"—is now known simply to consist of the dead bodies of white blood cells that have perished in the domestic fray. This curious story shows us why it is that certain animals are proof against certain ailments. The explanation is that the germs of such disease are destroyed by their white blood cells. Contrariwise, if an animal falls a victim to any ailment, its leucocytes have been defeated by the germ invasion. Such, at least, is the view of why we escape infection in some cases and succumb to it in others. Dr. Metchnikoff showed that men's bodies harbor quite a small population of microbes, some of which are not only friendly to us, but necessary and useful, while others are at least neutral, and if not actually pressed into our service at any rate do us no harm. Our skin is found to be amply provided with a microbic population that betakes itself chiefly to the little follicles or sacs from which hairs spring. In health the microbes are apparently harmless, but when we get out of sorts or when disease attacks us these skin germs are liable to pass beyond the limits of their natural life. Then they dive into the skin and produce boils and other things grievous to be borne. It would appear that our digestive system is the chief seat of microbe invasion. Thirty species of germs have been recorded as resident in the mouth, which is thus a kind of hothouse, seeing that its temperature is practically that of the blood. The reason why injuries of the mouth heal readily is attributed to the fact that the microbes assist the reparative process. Again, it is curious to find certain microbes flourishing in the acid of the stomach, which is certainly fatal to some of their race. When our microbe population is in good health and flourishing it therefore protects us against the atack of their organisms. When its own health is not good and when our microbes lose their vitality, they are unable to resist the attack of the invading particles. The real fact is that, while we all have to engage in a battle with our microscopic foes, we are materially assisted in the strife by others of the race.—Chicago News.

Exporting Our Coal.

During the first nine months of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1900, we exported to Great Britain 4,243 tons, to France 156,580 tons, to Germany 14,761 tons and to other countries in Europe 364,614 tons. It is probable that the bulk of the latter tonnage went to Mediterranean ports. Under conditions which are favorable to an extraordinary degree we marketed 540,000 tons, which is a paltry quantity relatively. The only really promising field is the Mediterranean. Our natural customers whom we have held for years are Canada, which took 3,751,877 tons, Mexico with 439,142 tons, Cuba with 277,251 tons and the West Indies with 297,054 tons. Our exports aggregated in the first nine months of the fiscal year 5,672,750 tons, of which 1,310,464 were anthracite sent to Canada. On the Pacific coast we imported coal from British North American to the extent of 1,093,839 tons.—Iron Age.

Signs in Vegetarian Restaurants.

Boston has a vegetarian restaurant which advertises in the papers as follows: "Shall we slay to eat?" No! Go to the —— dining rooms and learn the reason why. Have some of the meat substitutes."

A Hobo's Neat Trick

Ingenious Plan by Which He Secured a Second Pair of Shoes

Some hoboes are remarkably shrewd, according to a story told recently by a Washington man. "I'm something of a crank on the matter of shoes," he said, "and always have from six to a dozen pairs that are partly well worn, but still available for service. One morning last week a hobo called at the back door of my residence and succeeded in getting my wife there to hear his story. But the fact that his feet were on the ground pleaded more eloquently than any words of his, and my big collection of shoes was brought out for him to choose from. He took a couple, returned profuse thanks and left.

"Toward evening my wife was out and I at home. Along came a hobo with hair through his hat and feet through his shoes. He humbly asked me if I could help him in the matter of footwear, and I was in the midst of a refusal, when he said my wife had told him in the morning that I had a pair of shoes that were not mates, and that I would probably be willing he should have them. More with the idea of convincing the fellow that he was lying than anything else, I brought out the shoes. Sure enough, there were two of them for the left foot without any corresponding shoe for the right foot. I didn't see how he could utilize them, but he said they would serve his purpose, and he departed with them. My wife met him half way along the block, and he quickened his pace.

"In the morning that fellow had been sharp enough to pick out the two shoes for the right foot, and then waited till he could work me for the other two. I suppose one pair went to some pal. There's not one man in ten thousand would have thought of turning the trick he did."

Classmate of Garfield.

Captain Charles E. Henry, former marshal of the District of Columbia, was a classmate of President Garfield at Hiram College. He is now one of the largest land owners in Ohio, and has just been elected a trustee of Hiram College.

A RURAL-LOOKING SENATOR

COCKRELL, OF MISSOURI, HAS THE APPEARANCE OF A BUNCO MAN'S VICTIM

Senator Cockrell of Missouri has all the appearance of a rustic and would be selected anywhere by a bunco steerer as a possible victim of a gold brick swindle. Tall, angular, spectacled, with a slouch hat pulled over his eyes and well-worn black clothes dangling about his person, he is the type of the village "squire." His expression and manner are in accord with his appearance. His lower jaw is loosely hung, and is usually carried at half-mast. When walking the streets he gazes about him like a man bewildered. He hails a car with violent gestures while it is still a half-square distant. He generally has a bunch of old papers in his hand, and he cranes his neck at tall buildings as if he had never seen one before.

But in his case appearances are deceptive. There is not a particle of greenness about Mr. Cockrell. He has been in the senate for twenty-six years, and during all that time he has never been known to take counterfeit money either in trade or in legislation.

Whither Are We Drifting?

The increase of American divorces has been remarkably rapid. No longer ago than 1870 only 3½ per cent of marriages were dissolved by the courts. In 1900 the percentage was 8, and if the same rate of increase is kept up the closing year of the twentieth century will find 58.8 per cent of all American marriages dissolved by the courts. In other words, the year 2000, if we go on as we are going, will find more divorced than married persons living in the country. The divorces granted in all other civilized countries put together do not equal the number granted in the United States. And while our population is growing at the rate of 23 per cent per annum the number of divorced persons is increasing at the rate of nearly 70 per cent per annum. All of which may well make sober-minded citizens, who understand that the strength of a nation is its marriage altars rather than its divorce courts, ask themselves, Whither are we drifting?—New York World.

Woman Operates Water Power.

Mrs. Milford Brady operates an old fashioned water power mill in Morrow county, Ohio, her only assistant being a boy, and she lives in a log hut adjoining the mill and has no intercourse with her neighbors except in a business way. The mill, built a century ago, was owned by her father and she has kept it going since his death.

Mineral Oil as Fuel.

Now that such phenomenal developments in oil productions are daily being made in the south, there are hopeful reasons for believing that mineral oil will largely replace other combustibles as fuel.

The crab may not be as good eating as the lobster, but he'll do in a pinch.

Fly Can't Be Drowned.

Whatever other fate might befall it, naturalists agree that the common house fly cannot be drowned, and many experiments have been made in relation thereto.

Included in such tests was the immersion of a fly in clear, cold water, with a piece of cardboard to fit the glass and floated so as to keep the insect beneath the surface.

So little did the fly trouble about such an obstacle that it kept near the bottom of the glass, and there for a quarter of an hour ran about as freely as in the fresh air, while it at times crawled across the under side of the cardboard, as on the ceiling of a room.

After being immersed for twenty minutes the fly's movements were less active, and at twenty-five minutes it turned over upon its side, apparently dead. It hung suspended in the water just under the pasteboard, which kept it from rising to the surface, and there it remained for another twenty-five minutes.

It was then taken out and placed on a sheet of paper, looking, to all appearance dead. Its next fate was to be buried by being covered by about a teaspoonful of fine salt.

At the end of fifteen minutes the saline was shaken off, the fly having thus been completely covered, either by water or by salt for sixty-five minutes.

Immediately upon its release the insect trimmed its wings and legs actively for a while and then flew away.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Pike County Miracle.

Velpen, Ind., June 17.—Wm. O. B. Sullivan, a farmer of this place, and who is a brother of ex-Representative Sullivan of Pike and Dubois counties, has had a remarkable experience recently.

Mr. Sullivan is 40 years of age, and has been a citizen of Pike county for 20 years. For two years he has suffered with kidney trouble and rheumatism. His shoulders and side were very sore and stiff, and his back was so bad he could hardly straighten up at all. He had palpitation of the heart, and a smothering which was very distressing. He used three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and is as strong and well as he ever was. He pronounces his cure a miracle. Mr. Sullivan's statement of his case is startling.

"A month ago I was a cripple. To-day I can do a hard day's work every day, and have not a single ache or pain."

Dodd's Kidney Pills have done some wonderful cures in Indiana, but none more miraculous than in the case of Mr. Sullivan.

Education Has An All-Round Value.

A good college education also stands for the investment of power. The student invests power and power he takes out; for education creates and increases power. Two forms it specially promotes, which modern life demands; the power to think and the power to will. The power to think is the greatest intellectual power. The power of knowledge is the power of the granary, which gathers up and holds the harvests of many a field; the power of thought is the power of the mill which grinds these harvests into flour for the use of man. The power of thought is the power to see, to foresee, to reason, to judge, to infer. It is the power which every study of the college helps to train. Language gives discrimination; science, observation, analysis and synthesis—the taking apart and the putting together elements of thought; history, comprehension and philosophy, self-repletion and self-discovery. In some way—and the exact way is still unknown—the man who pursues these and the other studies of the college four years becomes a thinker. When he entered college he knew little, and could think less; when he leaves college, his knowledge is still limited enough, but he has gained a distinct power to think.—Success.

A Maclean and a Campbell.

When Sir Archibald Campbell was governor of New Brunswick he chanced to meet with an aged Highlander of the name of Maclean, who had done brave soldiery service for his country, and had borne himself well in many a fierce encounter. After his discharge he had settled in the woods; but things had not gone smoothly with him, and his circumstances were quite straitened. Anxious to befriend him, his excellency invited him to make his home at government house, where he could find easy work to do in blacking boots and shoes and such like little things. The old man was quite indignant, the hot blood mounting to his cheeks, and, drawing himself up to his full height, he replied, with all the dignity of a lord:

"Na, na, sir—na, na. A Maclean never blackit a boot for a Campbell."

He preferred with independence on the farm to ease as a menial in a rich man's house—a feeling that was appreciated by no one more warmly than by the genial and kind-hearted governor.—Chambers' Journal.

The Chances in Cuba.

There is an opportunity in Cuba for the investment of capital, if persons investing will be content with moderate returns. I do not think our new possessions hold out any inducement for an American who proposes to support himself and to better his condition by his labor. The climate of the tropics is not favorable to the Northern workingman, and the capitalist who expects to double his investment in a year or two, according to the present craze for obtaining immediate wealth, is very likely to be disappointed. Business methods, business sagacity and contentment with reasonable returns are likely to make ventures of capital fairly remunerative.—Senator Platt in June Success.

His Grounds.

"And on what grounds do you base your application for divorce?" asked the lawyer of his new client.

"Exertion, sah."

"You mean desertion, I suppose. Your wife has left you, doubtless?"

"No, sah; she hasn't left me, sah."

"Then you can't ask for a divorce on the ground of desertion."

"I said exertion, sah. Dat's de ground, perzackly. She done exert herself continually, to make me mizzable, sah. Put it on de ground ob exertion, sah."—Detroit Free Press.

Charles A. Towne is down in Texas buying oil lands. With Bryan amassing wealth hand over fist with his tongue and pen. Pettigrew scooping in several hundred thousand dollars on advances in railroad stocks, and Towne becoming an oil king, what on earth are we coming to? It really looks as if plutocracy was going to gather in what good men there are left. Only the country newspaper men remain poor—and this imperilistic administration is helping a good many of them out by witing P. M. after their names. The situation is so serious that it is almost grotesque. If this thing continues to spread, it won't be long before Hador E. Boen of Fergus Falls, will be the only thorough-bred agitator still living—Park Rapids Enterprise.

Nothing could more strongly emphasize the improved condition in the Philippines than the fact that the War Department is arranging to send 600 American teachers for the public schools to the islands in time for the opening of the next school year. These teachers will be selected by agents of the War Department and they will have to pay their own transportation to Sam Francisco. When they report there they will be put on half salary and given free transportation to Manilla. The idea prevails in the War Department that most of these teachers will de selected from the Pacific coast states. Gen. Bird, the head of the government transport service has promised to have them all in Manilla by August 15.—Paynesville Press.

Two business men were holding a conversation on the street corner the other day, when a lad about fifteen passed by and one of the men remarked: "That's a bright boy, I am watching him. If he gets through another year or so without contracting any of the bad habits so prevalent among the 16 year old boys in town I know where he will get the offer of a mighty good position." The boys should remember that they are continually watched by business men. The boy who is studious, indutrious, prompt, energetic, and reliable is preparing the way for a good position from somebody. There are not enough such young men to meet the constant demand.

The Northwesthern Miller of Minneapolis replies to the charge printed in English papers that the grain dealers of the United States maintain a "wheat hospital on the shores of Lake Superior, where "cured" wheat is loaded on ship and sent to Europe. The "hospital" is at Fort Arthur, Ont., where only Canadian wheat is treated. The Miller says that the foreign miller is anxious to secure wheat with which to compete against the United States and buys the cured article to manufacture into flour, while in the United States it could only be sold as chickfeed.

A dozen good cows fed well will make $500 or more a year besides their calves says the Forum. They will furnish milk and butter and beef which goes a long way toward a good living. They will turn waste straw and corn stalks into money and make good use of beet tops and cabbage leaves. They will trim your hedge fence and thrive at it. And besides all this they will improve the farm they are kept on, while a farm where only grain is raised to sell must of necessity become poorer and poorer until the end of the chapter. Cows will pay the taxs when wheat fails and the flax gets frost bitten. And they will pay you every month, or every week week for that matter, for their food and your labor. You don't have to trust them six months and then not get anything as you sometimes do with a wheat crop

A young man was at a social function the other night where it fell his lot to entertain a young lady and as she was pretty and full of life he enjoyed himself very well thank you. She had a short sleeved gown and he thought he never saw such beautiful arms, but she seemed ill at ease and finally said: "I was vaccinated the other day and it took beautifully, I could almost scream it hurts so." He gazed at her faultless arms in astonishment and asked: "Why where were you vaccinated? "In Fargo," she smiled; and the young man fell off his chair.—Detroit Record.

Some one who has studied the peculiar faculties required of the school ma'am, pays her the following eulogy: She must be a primary, intermediate grammar grade, high school teacher combined; she must be able to build fires, adjust fallen stovepipes, put in window panes, sweep, dust, split kindlings, drive a horse, keep out of neighborhood quarrels, know how and when and where to whip a bad boy understand the schools laws, raise money for libraries keep all kinds of records, plant trees on Arbor day, be of good character, and pass an examination in all branches of modern education. For these accomplishment she receives $30 per month. Think of a getting a salary. Out of this she pays her board, buys educational paper and books, attends county conventions and furnishe slate pencils to the pupils. —Warden Wolfer has authorized the statement that the Minnesota prison will have manufactured 5,000,000 pounds of binding twine by harvest, and that he will begin his sale to dealers today. J. J. Hill says: "The country at large rules the cities. I should be sorry to see the time come when the city interests control the country. At present they do not. Whenever a situation comes up where the integrity of the country is at stake the agricultural interests rise up in a body and sweep the obstacle aside. It is the man who owns the land, the area from which we live, who is the strongest factor in affairs."

The forthcoming reports of the labor commissioner and the commissioner of statistics will show a condition of affairs in the labor and agricultural world of Minnesota that will be actually startling to those who have not given special study to the subject. Everybody knows in a general way that all branches of employment and business are in a flourishing condition and that this is the working man's state and the working man's years, but few realize the vastness of the improvement in the last four years. Of course the actual figures are not yet obtainable, but enough has been disclosed by the investigations made to warrant the conclusion that the number of men in steady employment is almost double what it was at the beginning of 1897, and that the wages in force are at least 50 per cent. high. In other words, where there were a thousand men at work four years ago at a dollar a day there are two thousand at work now at a dollar and a half a day. That is where $1,000 were paid out for labor in 1897 $3,000 are paid in 1901. Such conditions cannot fail to establish a prosperity that is as general and lasting as the state itself and prosperity means happiness for all During the long period of depression and hard times previous to the restoration of the Republican party to power in 1897 there were not only fewer men at work and smaller wages in force, but those who were fortunate enough to find employment had to divide their meager earnings with those who had none. If there were five bread winners in a family and only three of them at work those three had to support themself and the other two also. That made a slim support and hard picking for all, because wages were adjusted by employers with a view to merely sustaining the laborer, with no margin for those primarily dependent upon him. Those who went torough that long cheerless era of "good old Democratic times" will remember it with horror, and will never return to it of their own accord. Prices were low enough then, but not so low as wages. There was penty of cheap produce then, but what good did that do the unemployed workman who had nothing with which to buy, even at a low price? That was the time when public charity established a line of free soup houses from New York to San Francisco to present actual starvation among the unfortunate poor. It spoke well for the generosity and philanthropy of those who had money, but it spoke ill for the party that had plunged the country into such straits by its irrational policies and its nonsensical attempts at what it was pleased to call "reform." It has been a long time, now since the public has heard or read anything about Pingree's Potato Patch Plan to keep the unemployed laboring men and their families out of want. The reason is quite apparent. Men are not to be found who will cultivate a potato patch on a vacant city lot, because they are all at work at good wages and they can buy their potatoes and hvae something left for sirloin steaks.

Fine Tarpon Fishing.

All of the Nimrods in Tampa are much exercised over the tarpon fishing in the bay, at the very doors of the city, says the Florida Times-Union. Capt. Warner, who tends the buoys in the bay, reported that Monday he encountered a school of 15 or 20 of them, and lost every hook he had in an effort to land at least one. Yesterday he saw another large number playing in the bay, no farther away than the third light. This is something new in the tarpon line, for they have never before been so near the city.

LILLIAN GILLIN.

"If so, then I am mad, indeed. Would that it were my fancy! Ah, Mr. Layton, you will soon learn the bitter foundation on which my so-called fancy has been built—soon stand aghast at this man's monstrous wickedness!"

"I wonder if I did right?" he questioned of himself, "not to tell Chester last night what I had seen? I wonder if love binds me to the duty that I owe my host? Yet I might further harm her, and that I cannot do. A few days sooner or later can work no great mischief, and until then I must keep my own counsel!—must watch and wait. Poor little girl! Ah, if she might but rest on my heart, how gladly it would open to receive her! But instead, there stretches before me a long, cheerless path of duty, and cold and stately Edith Lorrimer's step keeps pace with mine."

The day wore to its close, and the evening shadows ushered in Christmas Eve. The Christmas tree was lighted, with its innumerable candles, and tempting and beautiful gifts hung from every bough.

Mr. Grant had fulfilled his commissions well. All of the little household had gathered in the drawing room. All were waiting their host's surprise.

Rarely, indeed, had Randolph Chester been seen in so genial, so sparkling a mood. The guest particularly honored by his attention was Mr. Grant.

"He knew your father years ago, dear Beatrice," he said, "when he was but a lad. It seems strange, does it not? But we welcome him doubly at Grey Oaks for Cousin Donald's sake."

The girl listened with a dull weight at her heart. His words meant something? What?

She strove to throw to Bertie a glance of warning, but she could not catch his eye.

As they gathered about the tree Chester left the room; but almost before the rest had missed him he was among them.

"You promised us a surprise, Mr. Chester," said Miss Lorrimer. "When is it to be?"

"You shall not have great need of patience," he replied, "but first I want to tell you a little story. It concerns my Cousin Beatrice and myself. Suppose you make yourselves the judges between us. On the night of her father's death a robbery was committed—a robbery which cost his life. It was no common theft nor common thief. The man who robbed him was one whose hand he had honored by clasping it in friendship, and who in return, Judas-like, betrayed him. He dared, too, to aspire to the hand of my cousin's heiress, she who was betrothed to me."

"It is false!" interrupted Beatrice. "How dare you utter so base a lie?"

"She was betrothed to me," he repeated, quietly, and unheeding the denial; "but under the shock of the events of this night her brain gave way. Her former love for me became aversion—and to this man—this thief—this murderer—she gave her heart. He was at once arrested and imprisoned, but escaped. She, too, fled from my home and protection. Of her return you all know; but what you do not know is that he followed her here—he dared penetrate in disguise beneath the roof of the house he had desecrated. She, poor child, in her madness, sent him word to come to her. That word fell into my hands, and I let it go to its destination. I wished to entrap the wary plotter in the meshes of his own plot. Nor have I failed to do so. You all may have noticed an old man, with bent frame, white hair and beard, working in the grounds."

At these words Beatrice breathed freer; at least he did not suspect the truth.

"That old man is in reality young," continued Chester—"young and strong and athletic. His senses are keen and ever on the alert to escape detection: but detection has overtaken him. We have penetrated beneath the white hairs, the bowed frame and the trembling hands, and have learned them all to be as false as the wrinkles which draw his brow. Beatrice, the mask has been snatched from Bertram Talbot's face. I have asked these friends to be judges between us. Will you, likewise, consent to their verdict?"

A scornful smile wreathed her lips.

"Bertram Talbot is not yet in your power," she answered, nor could she repress the little thrill of exultation in her tone.

"You think not?" he responded, mockingly, and, drawing slowly to the side of Mr. Grant, laid his hand, as if, in friendship, on his arm. "What do you advise, Mr. Grant?" he said, somewhat lowering his tone.

"To wreak your worst!" replied Talbot, an inkling of the truth breaking upon him; but secure, even if so, in the trusty men he had about him.

"I have done so," replied Chester, with a sneer. "I am nearly done. But one step remains to be taken. That step constitutes the surprise I have promised my guests. The old man has made a hasty exit from the lodge, and, singularly enough, Grant, your two detectives from New York proved his accomplices. They, likewise, have disappeared. I concluded to-day to execute my own commissions. The result is that the state may feast another prisoner. Bertram Talbot, alias Mr. Grant, can you guess who it may be?"

As he spoke the last words, the door was flung open simultaneously with their utterance, and three men sprang into the room and to Talbot's side.

One moment sufficed to overcome his desperate resistance.

Then he stood, pale as marble, his burning eyes fixed upon the woman on whom his love had entailed yet further misery.

He had been so safe, so secure in all his plans. Was Chester man or devil, that he had thus divined and frustrated them?

The latter, rather than the former he looked, as with arms folded across his breast, a smile of ineffable hatred and malice wreathed his thin lips, and his gaze alternately wandered from one to the other of his victims.

"Look, my friends!" he said, at last. "You know who this man is who penetrates into my very household, and, Judas-like, accepts my hospitality to play the traitor. Take him away!" he commanded the men, "and see to it that he does not again escape us!"

"Beatrice, courage!" Talbot cried, in ringing tones. "You are not helpless in the hands of this villain. Allen Layton, I consign her to your care. Beatrice, look at me! Speak to me but one word! Oh, God in Heaven—he has killed her!"

For, even while he spoke to her, the stony gaze with which she stood staring into vacancy, seemingly unconscious of all that was going on about her, never relaxed, and, ere anyone could spring to catch her, she swayed forward and fell heavily, face-downward, on the floor.

CHAPTER XXII.

But wretchedness rarely kills. When it falls, a crushing weight upon the unprepared victim, it stuns at times; but they live on to suffer and to bear.

So it was with Beatrice. Scarce had they led Talbot from the room than she opened wide her great gray eyes to fullest consciousness of all the sad and bitter truth.

Cora was bending by her side, sobbing loudly.

"I—I did it all!" she cried. "Beatrice, Beatrice, forgive me!"

"Cora!" exclaimed Mrs. Layton, sternly, while Randolph Chester, stooping over her, whispered, "Cora!"

But, for the first time his voice failed to influence her. The spell which had bound her was broken.

"I—I promised to mail her letter to her lover. She intrusted it to me," she cried, in bitter, self-reproach, springing to her feet and standing facing them all. "He—he asked me for it, and I gave it up to him; but, oh, I did not believe he could be so cruel or so wicked! Beatrice, will you ever, ever forgive me?"

Unassisted, Beatrice had half-lifted herself, and was lifting her head against the cushioned seat of the chair from which, a few moments before, she had risen.

Randolph Chester held out his hand to assist her further. She wearily rejected it, but without scorn or spirit. It seemed to her that hope, indeed, was dead. Even Cora had betrayed her. On all sides she might be surrounded only by enemies. Her glance wandered toward Allen Layton. He stood, pale and silent, and beside him his betrothed, a smile of triumph on her face, which matched that of her host.

In that instant Beatrice knew that her cousin Randolph was no more bitter a foe to her happiness than was this girl.

"May I ask you all to leave me alone with Miss Markham?" asked Chester. "I have some words only her ears must hear."

One by one they obeyed his wish. Layton lingered last.

"Shall we leave you, Miss Markham?" he questioned, with gentle courtesy.

"Yes—go. Nothing matters now!"

"Beatrice," said Chester, "perhaps you understand now how useless it is to plot against me. To-night your lover sleeps in a cell. To-morrow he will be carried back to the Tombs to await his trial. Of his conviction there can be no doubt, as there is no doubt of his guilt. You are in my power—the power you have alike defied and trampled upon. I strove to show you mercy, but you rejected it. Now, listen to me. I give you three days for your decision. Within that time you will be my wife, or the doors of a private madhouse shall open to receive you, and you shall never come forth from its retreat. I am willing still to forget the past, provided that you will even yet be reasonable; but defy me yet, and I swear to you that I will make my threat no idle one. No; do not answer me to-night. To-morrow I will take your answer as my Christmas gift. Look to it that it it a fitting one! May I assist you to your room?"

"Do not touch me!" she said, shuddering.

And her bitter aversion helped her to drag herself to her feet and away from the hated presence to the shelter and the solitude of her own room.

She could not think. In anticipation she seemed only to hear mad laughter, and, closing her eyes, to see mad faces grinning at her from the darkness.

These were the sights and sounds amid which all her future life must be spent. A madhouse! For, as to the other alternative—ah, a madhouse was less terrible than that!

The morning broke and found her sleeping—sleeping the quiet, peaceful sleep of a little child. So criminals have been known to sleep on the eve of execution.

"It is indelicate to stay here another day," said Mrs. Layton to her son, as he entered the room, next morning, where his mother and Miss Lorrimer were holding an eager discussion. "Edith agrees with me that we should go at once."

"Edith agrees with you?" he said, sternly. "Then I do not. If Edith sees fit to go, she must go; but this young girl cannot be abandoned in her terrible distress."

"Abandoned, Allen? What an idea?" exclaimed his betrothed. "She is under the care of her cousin and guardian. I am sure his patience has been something superhuman. Really, Allen, I shall begin to fear that you are as mad as she is!"

"I am—fully as mad!" was his grave rejoinder. "Mother, there is something underlying all the events of the past few days. Unconsciously we have been the witnesses to a tragedy. I am determined to sift the matter out. Randolph Chester has been my friend—I am his guest and he my host—but ere I break bread again beneath his roof I shall say to him what I now say to you, that I distrust him, and that in whatever way I can serve Miss Markham, I shall do so! I feel a conviction that some terrible wrong has been perpetrated. The poor child must not brave the full force, alone and unaided, of this last cruel blow!"

"A cruel blow, Allen?" sneered his betrothed. "Does the arrest of a thief warrant such a term? Beside, you forget that he bars the way to the reward that you would claim. Allen, do you owe me nothing? Is my claim to be entirely disregarded? As your future wife, I ask you to leave this house today. The girl has bewitched you, and I am forgotten!"

"Not so, Edith. If you will work with me, I will gladly and gratefully accept your aid."

"Work with you?" she cried. "Work with you, when I overheard yesterday, in the library, all the plot which was frustrated last night! Work with you, when I learned from this girl and her lover's lips that they would make us all their tools and dupes?"

The pallor in Allan Layton's face deepened.

"You overheard the plot, as you call it," he said, in low, hoarse tones. "It was you, then, played first the spy and then the traitor? Answer me! How and when did you hear it?"

Unconsciously she had betrayed herself, but she could not now recede.

"I heard it all—yes!" she replied. "I overheard, the night before, an appointment to meet the next morning in the library. I concealed myself there before the hour. Why should I not have done so? Had I not already learned the influence for evil that she might wield? Well, I heard all, and word for word, I repeated it in Randolph Chester's ear. The result you know."

"The result—yes; but not yet is it wholly ended. Edith, you must know that the tie which binds us must be broken. I ask you to snap the bonds—to give me back my freedom. The result then will be accomplished.'

"You ask and I refuse! Break your engagement, Allen Layton, if you will. Voluntarily I never will renounce you!"

For a second after she had spoken her heart stood still with a mighty dread, but she had gauged him rightly.

A deep groan only broke the answering stillness, as, with head bowed on his chest, he went out from her presence to seek his host. Him he might meet on more equal ground.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

But Randolp Chester's place that morning was vacant, as one by oen they gathered in the breakfast room.

He had taken a hasty cup of coffee before the clock struck seven, then had walked down to the lodge, where he and Tyrrell had been closeted for fully an hour.

At the end of that time he had ordered his horse saddled, and had ridden over, with all speed, to the village, but this time he drew rein before the jail.

He asked to see Bertram Talbot, and was at once conducted to the bare, whitewashed walls which the iron-grated window converted into a cell.

The door closed behind him. The jailer withdrew. The two men were alone.

Talbot sprang up from the side of his cot, where he had been sitting in utter despondency.

"She is dead!" he muttered, in a hoarse whisper. "It is fitting that at your hands I should receive this last fell blow."

Chester smiled. Then, folding his arms across his chest and bracing himself for support against the wall, he fixed his mocking gaze on Bertram Talbot's face.

'No, she is not dead," he answered. "It was only a swoon last night. She recovered soon after you left. But whether her fate may not be worse than death rests with you. We have played a desperate game, Mr. Bertram talbot. Do you, or do you not, acknowledge yourself defeated?"

"Defeated? No!" answered the other, throwing back his handsome head with a gesture of proud disdain. "You bring me new life in the knowledge that she lives. So long as I have her to wirk for, her cause to redeem, do you think I will confess defeat? Ah, Randolph Chester, you little know the man with whom you have to deal!"

The smile, as he listened, never left Randolph Chester's lips.

"Perhaps," he asserted, "I know you better than you know yourself. I did not come here this morning to thrust my steel against the strong portions of your armor, but to slip in between the links, where its shap point might penetrate the flesh. It is true, what I have told you, that Beatrice Markham lives. But listen to me, and weigh well my words. Unless, within three days, she gives her full and free consent to become my wife—a consent to be instantly ratified by the performance of the marriage ceremony—she shall at once become the inmate of a private madhouse, in which henceforth her life shall b ea living death. This retreat you shall never discover—this I swear to you. Or even discovery would be of no avail, since the law makes me her guardian and I can prove her mad."

White and trembling, like a child stricken with some sudden fear, Talbot tottered backward on his wretched couch.

"You rob me of my strength," he murmured, "or I would murder you. Devil, leave me!"

'Not until I have finished, and you have heard all that I have to say. It rests with you, Bertram Talbot, to save her whom you profess to love, from a fate so terrible."

"With me? Ah, would to God it did!"

"With you—a word from you, and Beatrice Markham would withdraw her obstinate refusal to become my wife. Will you speak that word?"

"Are you mad, that you can put to me such a question?"

"I think when I have finished, any lingering doubt you may feel concerning my sanity will have disappeared. Listen to me! What is the alternative of your silence? Beatrice is forever lost to you, to me and to the world. You, yourself will be, in the eyes of this same world, a convicted felon. You will spend your best years in the garb of a convict, and within a penitentiary's walls. Supposing, at the expiration of your sentence, your prison doors open, what will your freedom be worth? Without money or reputation, what will your bare word avail, should you wish to lift up your voice against me? Or, if there were those who heeded yaur cry, unddemanded to see the proof of Miss Markham's madness, do you think they would not find her mad indeed? Nervous, delicately organized, I ask you could she bear years of confinement among the mad, listening to mad sounds, seeing mad sights, without indeed b coming as they?"

"Demon! fiend incarnate!" cried Talbot, "silence, or I swear that I will kill you!"

"I am not unarmed," answered Chester, coolly, and, opening his hand, he showed a small revolver that he held. "Men do not venture into a cage with wild beasts without precautions. Advance but one step toward me, and a buhllet through your brain will send your soul into eternity! I should not be o'er sorry of a pretext—we waste no love upon each other—and, in such a moment as this men drop the mask they wear. But there is another side to the picture I just have painted. You may turn it to the light if you will, and blot out the reverse of the canvas. A word from me will suffice to withdraw the charge against you. Nay, more—I will fully establish your innocence! You are poor. I will settle upon you a sum adequate for all your future needs. I will restore to you your social position among men. It is but a small matter that I ask in return—only that you should go to Beatrice and tell her that it is your wish that she should marry me; that, indeed, it is the only way by which you may be saved imprisonment for an act of which you are guilty. Are guilty, remember! You are to confess your guilt to her and acknowledge that you have prejudiced her against me most falsely! In the moment that you tell her this she will consent to anything—aye, even to becoming my wife! You see, I do not underestimate her present hatred and aversion—nevertheless, I wish to marry her. She is homeless, nameless, portionless—I give her all three. This is my alternative. Do you accept it?"

The veins on Talbot's temples stood out like knotted cords. His hands were so tightly clenched that the nails were buried in the flesh. Once let his fingers meet on Chester's throat, and they would never relax until he had strangled him. It was no fear of the pistol that kept him at bay—no fear of losing but of taking life! It was the awful impulse of murder, which brought the great beads of agony's sweat upon his brow, and sent the blood from cheek and lips back in a flood of ice upon his heart.

"Go—wreak your worst!" he said, at last, the words breaking, in a dull monotone from between his clenched teeth. "Oh, God! that anything so foul as your love should have stained the young life you so ruthlessly consign to a living death. But better that—better any torture, than the torture of your caress! Go! You hear me? Go, or one of us will bee a murderer!"

"You refuse, then?"

"Aye, I refuse!"

Clear and ringing now rang the denial.

The two men confronted each other, each standing now, with his arms folded across his breast, each with his gaze concentrated upon the other.

But, victor and triumphant, armed and secure, Randolph Chester's eyes fell first. But still the cruel smile wreathed his lips.

Within three days Beatrice Markham shall be my wife," he said. "I have asked for your co-operation. You have refused it. I will succeed without it, but your fate shall be none the brighter. eFlon! convict! it will make the long years of your servitude none the shorter for the knowledge that I, at last, have won and wear the jewel you coveted. Good morning, Mr. Talbot! I will see that the news of my marriage penetrates your prison cell!"

He went out.

Talbot was alone—alone with the burden of his tortured thoughts. He had been so strong, so secure, and now, like some trapped lion, he could but roar in terrible impotence.

"Oh God!" he cried, his eyes dry and burning with the hopeless fire of misery, "take my miserable life! Let me sueffr as you will, but save this child form such a fate!"

(To Be Continued.)

Stronger Than Usual.

"One day back in Detroit," remarked a Douglas street man, "I accidentally left some aqua fortis in a glass, and soon afterward was horrified to find the glass empty. I inquired as to what had become of it, and some of the boys in the store said that Bill Webster—a tough old sot who dropped in upon us occasionally—had drank it, supposing it to be liquor. In a short time he came in, and I said:

"'Bill, did you drink that stuff in the glass on the table?'

"He said he did, and then I told him that he had drank rank poison, and that he would be a dead man in five minutes.

"'Oh, I reckon not,' said Bill, 'but I knowed it was something a leetle stronger than I've been a-havin', for every time I blowed my nose I burned a hole in my handkerchief.'"—Omaha Mercury.

Only a Vision.

Hallucinations must be exceedingly unpleasant things, but it almost seems that one may get used to them in time. Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, the famous author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," said that her father, from his early youth, was greatly subject to hallucinations, and thought but little of them.

One day she entered the room and sat down by a writing table in the window. Presently Prof. Stowe came in, looked about him with a preoccupied air, but did not speak to her. She thought his behavior strange, and amused herself by watching him, until as last the situation became so extraordinary that she began to laugh.

"Why!" he exclaimed, "is that you? I thought it was one of my visions!"—

A SCIENTIFIC WORK

"Riddle of the Universe" a Curious Book.

Interesting, indeed, are the following conclusions arrived at by Haeckel, the scientist, in his new book "Riddle of the Universe," according to which for thousands of years the intelligence of man struggled with these problems of the infinite: The nature of matter and force, the origin of motion, the origin of life, the apparently pre-ordained orderly arrangement of nature, the origin of sensation and consciousness, the foundation of thought and speech, the question of the freedom of the will. Of these great seven questions some are declared to be insoluble, and each has caused endless discussion. Haeckel brushes them all aside and declares that the one simple and comprehensive enigma is "The Problem of Substance." According to Haeckel, the universe or cosmos is eternal, infinite, illimitable. It consists of two attributes, Matter and Energy. This dual substance fills infinite space and is in eternal motion. Forever this motion continues with periodic change from life to death. All masses are rotating constantly, and while certain ones, sidereal systems or tiny cells, move to their destruction in one part of space, others are springing into new life and development in other parts of the universe. It has taken our earth, one little speck in space, more than a hundred million years to develop its present forms of animal life, to say nothing of long periods of cooling that preceded life. Man is only the highest among the vertebrates, which in turn are the highest among animals. His immediate ancestors have been here at least three million years, and he himself since the end of the tertiary period. "Our mother earth is a mere speck in a sunbean in the illimitable universe, man himself is but a tiny grain of protoplasm in the perishable framework of organic nature." You, Mr. Reader, are a true "tetrapod," otherwise four-footed creature. Two of your feet have developed into hands by adaptation. You have five toes on each of your feet, because the amphibia of the carboniferous era happened to have five toes on each foot. Your great, great, great grandfather, nine million times removed, was a salamander. Do you doubt, asks Haeckel, that you come from an anthropoid ape? Then how do you account for these facts: You and the monkey have the same two hundred bones, arranged in exactly the same order. You have the same three hundred muscles directing your movements, the same kind of hair grows on your skin, the same groups of ganglionic cells build up the marvelous structure of the brain. You have thirty-two teeth, just like the monkey's thirty-two; a four-chambered heart, just like the monkey's—the same organs throughout The differences between man and the higher apes are not as great as those between the man-like apes and the lower monkeys. All this Haeckel demonstrates solemnly, with much pains and many details. He delights in the discovery of the fossil ape-man of Java, which he declares supplies the missing link and which he proudly calls "pithecanthropus erectus"—or, monkey shaped man standing up." He declares we should have found millions of other examples of the missing links except for the fact that they lived and died in trees, were devoured by other animals and consequently had no chance to reach a fossil condition unless by accident they fell off a branch into the water and were preserved in the slime at the bottom. Man springs from a single cell, as do all other living animals. His huge body is simply a great commonwealth composed of endless billions of these cells, each of which is a citizen in the great cell aggregation called man. What we are pleased to consider our brains is simply a certain combination of force and matter, acting under the influence of centuries of education and adaptation. Plants think, too, to a certain extent, and all the animals think more or less. Psychology, which assumes that the brain force is something separate from the rest of the body, is nonsense and child's play. Haeckel's view of the universe is a "monistic view."—Chicago American.

Dieting Consumptives

Must Eat Six Meals a Day at The Massachusetts State Sanitarium

Six meals a day constitute the regimen at the State Sanitarium for Consumptives at Rutland, Mass. The first meal is, of course, breakfast, and this, says a writer in the New England Magazine, is ready at a quarter to 8 o'clock. At all meals special diet is served when directed by physicians, but the usual breakfast menu is a cereal, chops, steak or eggs, muffins and cold bread and butter, tea, coffee and milk. After breakfast the patients are ready for outdoor exercise. This as well as every other detail of the patient's life, is under careful surveillance. Some are allowed to walk a number of miles, some only a short distance; others must lounge in the open air in hammocks or reclining chairs. Zero weather or snow does not interfere with this order of things, heavy furs providing the necessary warmth and fresh air the stimulant that all soon learn to depend upon. At half past 10 luncheon is ready in each dining room; and it matters not if the patient has a most interesting book, or a camp is being built, or the top of a hill commanding an unlimited view is almost reached—all must turn toward the house in time to reach there at the luncheon hour. These luncheons vary in kind and amount, and consist of raw eggs, eggnog, beef extract and milk. This is an essential part of the "cure," building up what the disease is trying to break down. Then out of the doors again for two hours, when dinner is served. This consists of a soup, a roast of meat (and on Friday fish), two vegetables, bread and butter, dessert, tea and milk. At half past three there is a second luncheon, and at a quarter of 6 is supper, consisting of a cereal, cold meats, bread and butter, sauce, tea and milk, and occasionally cake. At quarter past 8 is the last luncheon, at which is given hot or cold milk.

Chamberlain to the Pope.

Rev. Dr. Frederick Z. Rooker, just appointed chamberlain to the pope, is the first American to be made a member of the pontifical household. He is a native of New York city, 40 years old, and it was intended by his father and uncle, both newspaper men, that he should also take to their line of life. The young man's tastes lay in another direction. He is now secretary of the papal legation in Washington.

No Compliment In This

A Speech by Wilson Barrett to a.... Nervous Audience

Curtain speeches are supposed to be heart-to-heart talks, expressing the love that the talker has for the particular city in which he is playing at the time. Occasionally, however, an actor who moves through life outside the deep ruts worn by constant following in the conventional path surprises his hearers with a few plain, ungarnished facts that convince even the most skeptical of his sincerity. Wilson Barrett made such a speech in Philadelphia years ago. A brazier toppled over during one of his scenes and some one in the audience shouted "fire!" Barrett walked quietly to the brazier, stamped out the flames and went on with his lines as though nothing had happened. A stampede was avoided, but it was several minutes before the audience became quiet. At the end of the act there were cries of "speech, speech." Mr. Barrett came to the footlights.

"You are a pack of fools!" he exclaimed passionately. "I didn't mean to tell you of it—meant merely to think it; but you have asked me for a speech, so I have an opportunity of telling you precisely what I think of you." Then he went on to say that a man who cried "fire" in a theater was a murderer—that a trifle like a brazier upsetting could be remedied easily by those on the stage, but that a cry of alarm from any one in the audience at such a time might mean hundreds crushed to death. For ten minutes he gave that audience a lecture on idiocy. When he left the stage the applause was so hearty he was obliged to return and bow his thanks, remarking with a grim smile: "Don't forget what I told you, will you? I meant it for your own good."

Time to Break the Rule.

There is an anecdote in some volume of French theatrical memoirs narrating an experience of Mlle. Clairon, the great tragic actress, with a pupil of hers, a girl with strong natural gifts for the histrionic art, but far too frequent and too exuberant in her gesticulation. So when the pupil was once to appear before the public in a recitation Mlle. Clairon bound the girl's arms to her side by a stiff thread and sent her thus upon the stage. With the first strong feeling she had to express the pupil tried to raise her arms, only to be restrained by the thread. A dozen times in the course of her recitation she was prevented from making the gestures she desired until at the very end she could stand it no longer and in the climax of her emotions she broke the bonds and swung her hands to her head. When she came off the stage she went humbly to where Mlle. Clairon was standing in the wings and apologized for having snapped the thread. "But you did quite right!" said the teacher. "That was the time to make the gesture, not before!"—Harper's Magazine.

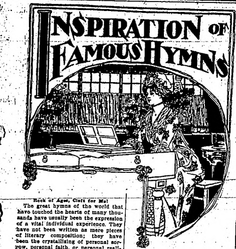
INSPIRATION OF FAMOUS HYMNS



Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me!

The great hymns of the world that have touched the hearts of many thousands have usually been the expression of a vital individual experience. They have not been written as mere pieces of literary composition; they have been the crystallizing of personal sorrow, personal faith, or personal realization. They have been the summing up of years of hope and struggle, focused in an instant of expression, as the century plant stores up vitality for decades to be evidenced at last in a sudden flowering. The circumstances that inspired some of our great devotional hymns must deepen the interest in both the song and the singer and reveal that mighty kinship of human souls, that divine sympathy, that confers deathless fame on a few simple verses, soul-biographies living in song.

This greatest of hymns was written in 1775 by Rev. Augustus Toplady, a very learned English divine, who died at the early age of thirty-eight. The hymn has the rare, wondrous spiritual ecstasy he revealed in his daily life. In his last illness he said: "I cannot tell the comforts that I feel in my soul; they are past expression. It will not be long before God takes me; for no mortal man can live after the glories which God has manifested to my soul." The marble tablet over his grave says: He Wrote "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me."

The Sweet By and By.

In 1867 this hymn, known as "The Sweet By and By," was written at Elkhorn, Wis., by S. Fillmore Bennett, who was associated with J. P. Webster in arranging a new collection of hymns, Webster was nervous, sensitive and easily discouraged. One day, when very blue, he went into Bennett's office, and when asked "What's the matter, now?" answered "It is no matter, it will all be right by and by." The idea flashed into Bennett's mind, as he then expressed it, was "'The Sweet By and By!' Why wouldn't that make a good hymn?" Turning to a table he at once wrote the words; Webster jotted down the music as if inspired. Half an hour later two musical friends entered the room and it was sung by the quartet.

Nearer, My God, to Thee.

Of the many hymns written by Mrs. Sarah Flower Adams, the only one that has survived is this hymn, based on the Bible story of Jacob's vision at Bethel, the imagery of which narrative it follows most faithfully. It first appeared in a volume called "Hymns and Anthems," published in 1841. The chief criticism made against this hymn is that it does not mention a Savior. Rev. A. T. Russel added a stanza covering this lack, but the new lines are rarely used and they never became popular.

Jesus, Lover of My Soul.

One day Charles Wesley was sitting by an open window, looking over the beautiful fields, when he saw a little bird pursued by a hawk. The poor thing, weak and frightened, in seeking to escape from its enemy, flew into the room and found refuge in Wesley's bosom. As the poet was then in great trouble and needed the safety of a refuge, the consolation of help from a higher power than his own, the incident seemed to him a divine message, and, thus inspired, he wrote the famous hymn.

Hold the Fort, for I Am Coming.

In October, 1864, Allatoona Pass, a defile in the Mountains of Georgia, was guarded by General Corse with 1,500 men. It was a strong strategic point and, moreover, a million and a half of rations were stored there. Freneh, the southern general, with 6,000 men, attacked the garrison and drove the defenders into a small fort on the crest of the hill. The battle was fierce; the northern soldiers fell in such numbers that further fighting seemed folly. But one of Corse's officers caught sight of a white signal flag fluttering in the breeze on the top of Kenesaw Mountain, across the valley, fifteen miles away. The signal was answered, and then came the inspiring message from mountain to mountain: "Hold the fort; I am coming.—W. T. Sherman." Cheer after cheer went up, and though hopelessly reduced in numbers they did hold the fort for hours until the advance guard of Sherman's army came to their relief. Six years later, P. P. Bliss, the evangelist, heard the story in all its vivid detail from a soldier friend, and then wrote the words and music of this famous hymn.

From Greenland's Icy Mountains.

On Whit Sunday, 1819, Dr. Shipley, an English clergyman, was to preach a missionary sermon. On the day preceding, Dr. Shipley requested his son-in-law, Bishop Reginald Heber, to write "something for them to sing in the morning." Heber retired from the table, around which a group of friends were assembled, and in a corner of the room wrote this hymn at one sitting.

Artificial Silk.

The manufacture of artificial silk, it is reported, has become quite a thriving industry in Germany, although it seems there are only certain purposes for which it can be used, but still these are very numerous. The output of the Elberfield district alone, it is said, amounts to $125,000 monthly. Certain disadvantages connected with the product, among which is its highly inflammable character, having acted as a deterrent to its manufacture, but an improvement in the process has recently come into use in France which avoids most of these disadvantages. According to this method dry nitrocellulose, india-rubber solution and a salt of tin, preferably stannous chloride, are mixed together in the proportions of 100 pounds of the first to 7 pounds of the second and 5 pounds of the last. To this a suitable solvent, like benzine, is added in such quantity as will bring the mixture to the desired consistency.

Lemon Juice of Barrooms.

Now that the sale of a bogus lemonade has been forbidden by law, it would be interesting to know what action would follow an investigation of the compound used as lemon juice in many of the barrooms that pretend to be of the first rank and are entitled to a place in that category so far as their prices can put them there. The mixture commonly used in drinks requiring lemon juice possesses only one quality of the real thing. It is sour, but it suggests the fruit in no other particular and tastes of foreign ingredients too strongly to deceive the most inexperienced.—New York Sun.

Allow Time for Play.

The all work and no play. woman soon becomes scarcely more than a machine, a machine that too often runs without the wheels being greased—in a hard, grinding, squeaking way, requiring much more strength and time than if a little lubrication had been given in the shape of occasional pleasant moments snatched by the ways, says the Jacksonville Times-Union. There is one thing certain; it is better to try and be content with little, doing without some things that we may have a great desire for, than to so wear ourselves out body and spirit in their attainment that we lose the power of enjoyment, too tired to care for anything. So the wise woman, though, like the woman in the Bible, she rises "while it is yet night," she yet makes sure of a little time every day—perhaps not more than a half hour—which is her very own, and with which stranger or friend "intermeddleth not."

Fools and sensible men are equally innocuous. It is in the half fools and half wise that the greater danger lies.—Goethe.

DANGER OF THE PLAGUE.

American Cities Are by No Means Immune to the Disease.

In the absence of a federal health board it becomes the proper business of all municipal health officials, especially at the seaports to be prepared to resist the possible approaches of the bubonic plague. That the world is by no means free from the menace of a great epidemic of this "black death" is the declaration of a man who speaks with authority. Dr. L. F. Barker is a pathologist who was at one time a member of the faculty of the Johns Hopkins university, and who now occupies the chair of pathology at the Rush Medical College, Chicago. Two years ago he was sent to India and China by the former institution to study the plague conditions, and later was appointed to investigate the plague cases in San Francisco for the government. Probably there is no American who is better qualified to speak on this subject than is Dr. Barker. In a recent address before a medical society Dr. Barker announced that American cities are far from immune as to the "sneaking pestilence," which is spread chiefly through the agency of rats. In the great epidemic of the fourteenth century, which cost 25,000,000 human lives, it was a characteristic of the plague that it developed by bounds. Before there was time to take precautions a vast proportion of a community would be in the grasp of the disease, while the remainder would be terror-stricken. Hindu writings 80 years old note the fact that a visitation of the plague was always preceded by a great mortality among rats. Dr. Barker noted that in India he saw dead rats everywhere, and the same phenomenon has been observed in Japan. It is believed that if the rodents could be exterminated, as the government of Japan has proposed, the danger of an epidemic of the plague would be much reduced.

ART OF WALKING.

Common-Sense Footwear Makes Good Pedestrian of American Girl.

The American girl is learning how to walk. For many years she has been a martyr to French high-heeled shoes, the toothpick toe and the wafer sole, but now common sense footwear is the vogue. It took a long period of discomfort, if not actual suffering, to convince woman that she could wear a sensible shoe and not detract from her personal charms, comments the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune. Now that she has been convinced of the error of her ways more interest is manifested in the correct style of walking and the proper manner of holding the skirt. In correct walking there is the poetry of motion, the delicacy of poise and the scientific adjustment of the weight of the body which the ancients knew so well, but which the moderns slur, if they do not absolutely ignore. The girl who walks correctly is a joy to herself and all who behold her. She has some purpose in life. She is, nine times out of ten, neatly dressed, bright-eyed and healthy. Watch her and you will see that the ball of her foot is the center upon which the weight of the body swings; and that upon the heel and the toes there is an even balance of the strain, if such it may be called, the heel not being called upon to do more than the toes or the toes more than the heel, while the sole is the medium between the two extremes. In correct walking the foot is placed evenly upon the surface, with the pressure first upon the heel, then upon the ball of the foot, and then upon the toes. From the ball of the foot, and the toes the impetus and elasticity of the stride originate.

A Trafficker in Vanity.

There are many queer pursuits in the world, but of them all it is doubtful if any rank higher in the "Land of the Odd" than the traffic carried on by an enterprising Yankee in New York. He has his place in the basement of one of the office buildings on lower Broadway and deals in labeled trunks and traveling bags—that is, trunks and traveling bags that have seen service abroad and that bear the labels of foreign hotels. A man going to Europe, if he works judiciously, can on his return get twice what he paid for his bag or trunk at starting. The enterprising Yankee who conducts this queer traffic meets the passengers of incoming steamers. He sizes up his people with an accuracy born of long experience, knowing instinctively who it is that has probably exhausted his funds on his trip on the other side and who will be very willing to accept a good price for his belabeled traveling appurtenances.—Baltimore Sun.

Scotland Gets Grievance Redressed.

Scotland has got one grievance redressed. The commission that was appointed by the private legislation procedure (Scotland) act, a short time ago, to consider Scottish applications for what are called "provisional orders" has been sitting in Edinburgh, and has disposed of much legislation relating to towns, harbors and railways. Before the new act came into force, every private bill from north of the Tweed had to go to London to be considered by a committee of parliament, and a mile of railway could not be built without the London lawyers getting their "pickings" from it. The new act abolished all this, and now Scotland is able to settle its own affairs in its own country.

An Effective Advertisement.

All successful business men agree that good advertising pays. Good advertising means interesting announcements placed in newspapers which reach a large proportion of the people. Probably most experienced advertisers would say that to make the merits of a single commodity the feature of an "ad" is the most direct and effective way of getting people's attention fixed on an establishment.—Philadelphia Record.

CUBANS ACCEPT IT

FAVORABLE ACTION ON PLATT AMENDMENT.

Without Discussion the Constitutional Convention Accepts Platt Amendment by a Vote of 16 to 11—Made an Appendix to the Constitution — News Received in Washington With Genuine Gratification—Speedy Evacuation Will Follow, Contingent on the Establishment of a Stable Government.

Havana, June 14.—The Cuban constitutional convention yesterday accepted the Platt amendment by a vote of 16 to 11. The resolution to accept was carried without discussion. Immediately after the opening of the session Senores Tamayo, Villuendas and Quesada, constituting a majority of the committee on relations, submitted as a substitute for the committee's former report the Platt amendment as passed by congress, recommending that it be accepted and made an appendix to the constitution. In the vote on the resolution the twenty-seven delegates present divided as follows:

In favor of acceptance: Senores Capote, Villeundas, Jose M. Gomez, Tamayao, Monteaguedo, Delgado, Betancourt, Giberga, Llorente Quesada, Sanguilly, Nunez, Rodriguez, Berriel, Quilez, Ferrer.

Opposed to acceptance: Senores Zayas, Aleman, Eudaldo Tamayao, Juan Gualberto Gomez, Cisneros, Silvala, Fortun, Lacret, Portuendo, Castro, Mandeley.

Senores Rivera, Correoso, Gener and Robau were absent.

The latter two voted against acceptance in the previous division. Senor Ferrer voted with the Conservatives, explaining his change of attitude by asserting that he believed acceptance would be the best solution of the problem. The convention will now appoint a committee to draw up the electoral law.

Gratification at Washington.

Washington, June 14.—The news of the adoption of the Platt amendment by the Cuban constitutional convention was received with genuine gratification here. The administration officials all along have felt confident that its ratifications would be accomplished when the Cubans realized that this government was firm in its attitude regarding the amendment and that its acceptance would be necessary before the United States would consent to withdraw its supervision from the island. Now that the Cubans have demonstrated their good faith in the United States it is expected that a fairly speedy evacuation of the island will follow, contingent only upon the establishment of a stable government in the island.

UNCLE SAM'S WARDS.

What It Costs Each Year to Care for the Indian.

Washington, June 14.—It costs Uncle Sam a handsome sum each year to care for the Indian wards of the nation. The commissioner of Indian affairs has completed the revision of the salary list of the various Indian schools. The list for the coming year amounts to $1,224,470, a decrease of $2,000 from the list of the current year. There have been no material changes in the corps of teachers and other school employes, now numbering about 3,000. On this basis it is estimated that it costs the government about $150 a year to clothe, feed and educate each child in the Indian schools and furnish him with medical attendance and other necessities.

WICKED WEAPON.

New Rifle Adopted for the British Army.

London, June 14.—The war office has adopted the Simpson machine rifle for the British infantry. It is described as a Bijou Maxim, adapted for hand carriage and capable of pumping a hail of lead at extraordinary speed. It is used in a prone position, the user lying across a saddle frame, the weight of his body holding the weapon in position. It is intended to issue fifty of these weapons to each infantry battalion.

Sheriff Mortally Wounded.

Kennedy, Tex., June 14.—Sheriff W. T. Morris, in attempting to arrest two Mexicans about ten miles west of here, was shot and mortally wounded by one of them. Morris killed the man that shot him and wounded his other assailant. The wounded man escaped, but officers have gone in pursuit. Excitement is high and threats of lynching are freely made in the event of a capture being made.

Y. M. C. A. Convention.

Boston, June 14.—The great influx of delegates during the past twenty-four hours largely augmented the audiences that filled Mechanics' hall yesterday at the various sessions of the Y. M. C. A. International convention, which was chiefly devoted to the presentation by able speakers of subjects and problems bearing on the progress of the Y. M. C. A. work during the past fifty years.

Mayors Abandon Their Towns.

Merida, Yucatan, June 14.—The Maya rebels, now hiding in the forests and swamps, having abandoned their towns, number 1,500 and lack ammunition. Their best general, Prudencio Cane, is dead. Gov. Canton, with his staff, has reached the rebel capital, Chan Santa Cruz. The governor was enthusiastically received by the troops.

First Sunstroke of Season.

La Crosse, Wis., June 14.—The first sunstroke of the season attacked Thomas Hurley while working with the city macadamizing gang. He was unconscious for half an hour, and his age makes it serious.

Catholic Foresters of Dakota.

Madison, S. D., June 14.—The state convention of the Catholic Order of Foresters was held in this city. This is the second annual meeting held in South Dakota, and about fifty delegates were present.

WOODMEN ON PARADE.

Brilliant Spectacle Witnessed at St. Paul.

St. Paul, June 15.—Mingled with the green that figured appropriately in so many of the uniforms of the Modern Woodmen, and the royal purple and white that is the emblem of the Royal Neighbors, the silver axes of throngs of degree teams shone resplendent yesterday morning in the grand parade of the order which is holding its national head camp in St. Paul this week. There were fully 5,000 people in the parade, which was witnessed by an admiring audience that blocked every available vantage point. Several of the Royal Neighbor camps had floats of picturesque design. Conspicuous among these were the boats of Royal Oak and Prosperity camps, in which were women adorned in the colors of the order.

The degree teams varied the monotony of the march by figures endless in their variety and almost faultless in their execution, while on the quota of auxiliary organizations a variety was lent by tallyhos, floats of unique design and the advertising devices of the various cities which desire to entertain the next head camp.

WISE MURDER CASE AGAIN.

Detectives Promise Important Developments Soon.

Anoka, Minn., June 15. — The presence at Anoka yesterday of a couple of private detectives from Minneapolis who renewed investigations regarding the murder of a year ago, caused a good deal of excitement. Detectives William Baxter and Charles D. Braun, accompanied by Martha and Eliza Wise, visited the Wise farm. This was the first time since a year ago that the girls had visited the old home. The girls said they were tired of city life, and only wished they were back on the farm again. This bit of sentiment from these girls came as a surprise. The purpose of the detectives in visiting the Wise farm was to follow up certain clues which they have received from interviews with William Wise. It is expected there will be important developments soon.

YOUNG GIRL DISAPPEARS.

Supposed to Be Secreted by Parties Unknown.

Elroy, Wis., June 15.—Azzelle Mentink, a pretty twelve-year-old girl of Wonewoc, is detained in secret by some unknown persons, and has been for the past two months. Her whereabouts is a complete mystery to the police and other officers of the law in Juneau county. The child was last seen on April 10, the date of her mother's death, when she left school and was put on a train at Madison. Azzelle Mentink is the daughter of John Albert Mentink, who died at Watertown in 1891, leaving a will in which he appointed his sister, Mrs. Julia Kroscher of Milwaukee, guardian of the person and estate of the child. Mrs. Kroscher has been trying to secure the child for some time.

NEGRO MASONRY.

Grand Lodge of Washington Withdraws Its Recognition.

Tacoma, Wash., June 15.—The grand lodge of Masons has rescinded the resolution adopted two years ago recognizing negro masonry. The action of the lodge at that time was severely criticized all over the United States, and as a result the next session of the grand lodge attempted to return to the old established principles, but the resolution was so artfully drawn that sister lodges refused to construe it as an honest expression. The lodge has now in unmistakable language made its position known.

Gas With the Water.

Heron, S. D., June 15.—A telegram from L. B. Wadley, owner of an immense stock ranch twelve miles north of Pierre, to John H. King of this city states that Norbeck & Nicholson have completed an artesian well on the Wadley ranch that exceeds in water flow and pressure any of the numerous artesian wells in that part of the state. The new well is 1,550 feet deep and flows 7,000 barrels of water per day. A special feature is the strong flow of gas that accompanies the water. It is of better quality and much more abundant than that which comes from the other wells.

Shoshones May Cause Trouble.

Red Lodge, Mont., June 15.—Serious trouble is threatened with the Arapahoe Indians on the Shoshone reservation, just across the state line in Wyoming. The reds have openly defied the authorities and are preparing for the sun dance. The state militia has been ordered to the scene. The Indians are said to be in an ugly mood, and as they outnumber the whites ten to one the outlook is regarded as serious.

Died in Terrible Agony.

Benton Harbor, Mich., June 15.—John E. Mitchell, a Milwaukee traveling man, died in terrible agony in the Pere Marquette depot here yesterday. His last words were: "They're after me." Death was caused by poison. Both suicide and murder theories are advanced. The latter is believed to be the more probable. He was an Australian and his parents reside in New Zealand.

South Dakota Coal Fields.

Aberdeen, S. D., June 15.—The state geological society will send an expedition into the country west of the Missouri river this summer to explore the coal deposits in that region.

Fire Was Fatal.

Oskaloosa, Iowa, June 15.—A charred body was found in the ruins of the Fremont elevator which was burned Wednesday night. It was recognized as that of Frank Gunn.

Lawyer Accused of Perjury.

IS PERFECT ROT.

That's What Army Officers Say of the Allegations of Fraud.

San Francisco, June 15.—Capt. A. W. Kimball, post quartermaster of the Presidio, made the following statement in regard to the alleged frauds in the sale of quartermaster's supplies belonging to the government:

"I am the officer that is concerned in this matter, yet no one has made any inquiry of me. I am the only bonded officer at the post, and the only one accountable and disbursing officer. If there has been anything irregular I would be pleased to give all the assistance in my power in the search for the guilty men, if there are any. All the government things sold in the pawnshops are sold by discharged soldiers from the returning volunteer regiments.

Col. J. B. Rawles, artillery corps, post commander, said:

"All this talk of fraud is perfect rot. People have been nagging for a year on the same subject. I have been aware of the soldiers selling their clothing for a long time. One of the puzzling and perplexing things in army management is to keep the soldiers from selling their clothing. I am confident that no quartermaster's sergeant or civilian employe is implicated in the selling of even a shoestring."

DYNAMITERS AFTER DOWIE.

Threaten to Blow Him Up Unless He Stops Operations.

Chicago, June 15. — Dynamiters are after Dowie. The doctor and all his works are to be elevated to a new sphere of usefulness if the plans outlined in a letter to Chief O'Neill yesterday are carried out. An infernal machine is to do the business. Chief O'Neill is asked to keep his men away so they won't get hurt when Dowie comes down. The letter is incoherent and rambling in construction, but declares that a dozen or so of skilled men belonging to an anarchist set, people who have become disgusted with Dowie, have worked three months on a clever dynamite plan, which is in readiness to blow him and every place he has up unless he gives assurances he will stop present operations.

SMALLPOX SCARE.

An Epidemic Is Feared in the Northern Part of Michigan.

St. Joseph, Mich., June 15.—Reliable reports received here from various localities in Van Buren county, some forty miles north of Benton Harbor, state that a smallpox epidemic is feared in the strip of country from Bangor to McDonald, a small station on the Pere Marquette railroad. Some 200 people in this strip, which is not over twenty miles long, are suffering with the disease in a mild form. Two deaths occurred in the last forty-eight hours. The last victim was Frank James, a telegraph operator who lives in the stricken territory. James was suddenly taken with the disease Sunday evening and died the following morning, suffering with great agony.

REMOVAL TO CANTON.

It Will Occur as Soon as Mrs. McKinley's Condition Will Warrant.

Washington, June 15.—All the reports from Mrs. McKinley's sick room are encouraging and plans are making for her removal to Canton as soon as she is in a condition that will safely warrant it. When that will be is still problematical. No other plans are in contemplation. Great care is taken to guard Mrs. McKinley from overtaxing her very limited strength. She experiences no discomfort from the heat and the complaints causing the greatest apprehension continue to yield slowly to treatment.

Took His Own Life.

Hutchinson, Kan., June 15.—Because he believed he was going blind J. A. Tuttle, traveling freight agent of the Rock Island railroad, for many years traveling auditor of the Memphis road, committed suicide in an undertaking establishment in this city by firing a bullet through his head last night. Tuttle recently consulted an oculist who told him that he would lose his eyesight in the near future.

Epidemic of Black Smallpox.

El Reno, Okla., June 15.—Dr. White has returned from the Kiowa and Apache country where he has been to investigate smallpox rumors and reports that an epidemic of black smallpox, fatal in nearly every instance, is raging among the Indians. This is the country soon to be opened for settlement.

Poisoning Suspected.

Wabasha, Minn., June 15.—The county authorities yesterday exhumed the body of the young child of Mrs. Lilly Wilson, which died a couple of weeks ago, and sent the stomach to St. Paul for examination. They are suspicious that poison was administered. The child died in convulsions.

Wreck and Drowning.

St. Johns, N. F., June 15. — The schooner Czar, bound to Labrador with fishermen and their families, seventy persons, was driven ashore on Cabot island, on the north coast of Newfoundland in a dense fog and gale on Sunday night. Four men were drowned and six others injured.

Killed in a Runaway.

Anderson, Ind., June 15.—In a runaway yesterday Miss Bertha Stewart jumped from the buggy and was instantly killed by breaking her neck. Miss Lillie Rich and Mrs. Webb were also injured.

MORSELS OF WIT & HUMOR

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM.

There were two handsome old ladies sitting at the window with their work in their laps, one the hostess and the other the visitor. They were children together and still talked of their former playmates as "the girls."

"Where's Margaret?" asked the visitor.

"Out in the back yard with some little friends skipping the rope. My favorite granddaughter, you know."

"Rather delicate, I'm afraid. I declare I don't know what the race is coming to, judging from the girls now growing up. They don't seem to endure anything. Do you remember how we used to skip the rope, Sue?"

"Just as though it was yesterday. 'Salt' was the designation when we just jumped an ordinary rate of speed, 'pepper' was faster, and 'mustard' was the fastest."

"That's right. To do anything faster than 'mustard' meant fits or palpitation of the heart. Dear me! I don't suppose that there is one of those children out there could skip 'mustard' without having a sick spell. We certainly go backward each generation, Sue. Let's take a look at them."

When they reached the back door there was Margaret flying up and down as though she had wings, springs and lungs like a long-distance runner, says the Detroit Free Press. She was jumping two ropes going in opposite directions at the same time and whirling as rapidly as the operators could make them.

"Come here at once, Margaret," called the hostess. "What in the world are you doing, child? It's enough to give you convulsions. Why, it's faster by far than 'mustard.'"

"'Mustard,' sneered the granddaughter, who was breathing easy. "It's too slow for us. That's 'tobasco' I'm doing."

Then the old ladies filed back, looked sheepishly at each other and went to talking about how much better-looking girls used to be than they are now.

'TWAS JOHNSON.

From the New York Evening Sun: It was in Magistrate Brann's court a few days ago. A frail little white woman had her husband, a strong, big negro, up for non-support. She said that he would not suport her, because he was jealous of another man, who had paid her some attention. The magistrate heard the story, and then turned toward the prisoner and asked:

"Well, Mr. Othello, what have you to say to that?"

The policeman who made the arrest leaned over and whispered to the magistrate:

"His name isn't Othello, your honor," he said. "It's Johnson."

"SALTED" REAL ESTATE.

"Why are all those promoters buying your land?" asked the amazed boarder. "It isn't possible that there is oil under the surface?"

"Not by a jugful!" chuckled the wise old farmer. "Its just a little scheme of mine. I mixed gold paint in the food of the last fowls I shipped to town. The city folks found it in the craws of the poultry, an' you couldn't make them believe thar ain't a vein of gold on my farm."—Chicago News.

HE NEEDED THE MONEY.

From the Milwaukee Sentinel: A well-known local character, who never had a cent of money that anyone knew about, and whose sole object in life appeared to be the accumulation of liquid refreshments, recently approached a candidate for office, and in his rich Irish brogue, supported with a fair quality of "jag," remarked:

"Jimmie, me boy, it's me that's glad to see ye roonin' fer office, and Oi'm goin tu work ha-r-d to see ye elicted. Oi'm goin' down' to the Thir-r-d war-r-d this blissed afthernoon and Oi'm goin' to git ye more votes than ye iver dreamed about. Oi always did loike ye, Jimmie—ye young spalpeen ye—and it's me that niver wint back on a frind. And, Jimmie, what's more——"

Here he leaned over to one of "Jimmie's" ears and whispered mysteriously:

"Begobs, Oi'm goin' to spind me OWN mu-u-nny!"

It is probably unnecessary to state that Jimmie "loosened."

WAITER WAS NO LINGUIST.

He pulled himself up at the hotel table, tucked his napkin under his chin, picked up the bill of fare and began to study it intently. Everything was in restaurant French and he didnt like it.

"Here, waiter," he said, sternly, "there's nothing on this I want."

"Ain't there nothin you would like for dinner, sir? inquired the waiter, politely.

"Have you got any sine qua non?"

The waiter gasped.

"No, sir," he replied.

"Got any bona fide?"

"No, sir, we haven't.'

"Got any semper eadem?"

"No, sir, we haven't."

"Got any jeu d'esprits?"

"No, sir, not one.'

"Got any tempus fugit?'

"I reckon not, sir."

"Got any soirea dansants?"

"No, sir."

The waiter was edging off.

"Got any sine die?'

"We ain't, sir."

"Got any pluribus unum?"

The waiters face showed some signs of intelligence.

"Seems to me I heard of that, sir," and he rushed out to the kitchen only to return empty-handed.

"Maybe you've got some beef and cabbage and a gooseberry tart?"

"Sure we have, sir," exclaimed the waiter, in a tone of the utmost relief, and he fairly flew out to the kitchen.—Tit-Bits.

Fingerless Lace Gloves.

Last evening I found Dolly busy with some pieces of old lace flounces. For some time I watched her cutting, snipping, taking up the threads and tying little knots here and there to keep the lace from ravelling before I discovered what she was doing, says a writer in the Minneapolis Times. Then at last, when she had transformed one of the pieces into a funnel shaped affair and had pulled it over the hand and forearm I concluded she was making gloves. These lace gloves she tells me are to be the rage this summer for dinner and garden parties. They are fingerless and may be elbow or shoulder length. At the stores they are sold for $50, $60 and even $100 a pair, but Dolly says that any girl who is skilful can make her own lace mittens. Silk mitts will also be worn, I suppose, as the vogue of the fingerless lace glove will suggest the wearing of lace mitts.

A very moderate estimate for the antiquity of man, according to recent investigations of a French scientist, is 238,000 years.

LIGHT STREET COSTUMES.

Comparatively New Fashion, Although Started Some Years Ago.

Wearing light costumes on the street is a comparatively new fashion, although the fad started two or three seasons ago. At present the fashion has been carried to such an extent that the plain dark gowns are conspicuous from contrast. Not only are the smart gowns of this season light in color, but in texture, and gauze veilings and silks that were at one time only considered appropriate for midsummer, and for garden parties then, are now worn for shopping and going about. Foulard gowns, always appropriate, always useful, are extremely fanciful in design and most elaborately trimmed with lace and embroidery, and made in the lightest or most brilliant colors. The smartest dressmakers make for their best customers the quietest of gowns to come in town for a day's shopping—the black and white check silk mohair, a light wool, the dark blue, a gray veiling, with a touch of color or with lace collar or revers, no lace on the skirt; mohair gowns trimmed with the same material or taffeta in flat folds or bands, lines of stitching, either white or the color of the gown, and the only attempt at lightening the somewhat severe effect is to be seen in the front of lace. Dark color or black taffeta silks are made also for street wear, but also very plain, with short jacket and skirt trimmed with stitching in tucks and folds. Striped or checked silk ginghams, made quite plain, are also smart for street wear in summer or for a day's shopping. These are on the lines of the tailor gowns and are made without lace or embroidery, excepting what is used in trimming the waist.

INSANITY FROM COFFEE.

A St. Paul, Minn., Woman Insane from Its Use.

A Mrs. Lindberg of St. Paul, Minn., was recently adjudged by a probate court to be insane. On investigation she was found at her home in a state of maniacal excitement so great that she could only with difficulty be restrained from tearing off her clothing. According to her husband's statement and the facts which were elicited by the investigation, it appeared that the cause of Mrs. Lindberg's insanity was the use of coffee. Mrs. Lindberg had for some years been accustomed to the free use of coffee for the relief of headache. The headaches had greatly increased in severity, and the amount of coffee was gradually increased. Recently she had been taking thirty or forty cups of coffee daily. Tea produces the same effect as coffee. Numerous other cases have been reported in which a complete breaking down of the nervous system has resulted from the use of tea or coffee. Teatasters and coffee-tasters furnish many illustrations of the deleterious effect of these beverages. Mrs. Lindberg was simply a coffee drunkard, and was as much addicted to her beverage as any toper was ever addicted to liquor. She kept her coffee-pot boiling continually, and devoted her whole attention to the brewing of her favorite beverage.

A Famous Apple Tree.

The American Cultivator says that the original greening apple tree is still standing on the farm of Solomon Drowne at Mount Hygeia in North Foster, R. I. The tree was a very old one when the farm was sold in 1801. The seller informed the purchaser that it was a pity the old tree was going to decay, as it produced the best fruit of any tree in the orchard. The purchaser determined to see how long he could keep it alive, and it still survives after almost another century has been added to its venerable years. But it shows signs of final decay, and the parent of all the famous Rhode Island greenings, which has set its graft on the orchards of almost all the world, will soon be but a neighborhood memory. It is doubtful if there is a more famous apple tree to be found in all Pomona's grooves from end to end of the earth.

What It Costs to Fight Fire.

The cost of the New York city fire department, the efficiency of which is unchallenged, is $3,500,000 a year. Chicago, which has suffered more severely from a great conflagration than any other large American city, expends $1,500,000 a year for the maintenance of its fire department, and Boston, which has suffered severely in the same direction, though very much less populous and a more compact city than Chicago, expends $1,200,000. Southern cities generally spend little on their fire service, and it has been found generally that the ratio of cost increases as the population becomes more compact.

KILLED BY A FALL

ADELBERT S. HAY THE VICTIM OF A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY AT NEW HAVEN.

SECRETARY HAY IS PROSTRATED

Full Details of the Tragedy Will Never Be Known—Generally Supposed That While Sitting in the Window He Dozed Off and, Overbalancing, Fell to the Pavement

New Haven, Conn., June 25. — Adelbert Stone Hay, former consul of the United States at Pretoria, South Africa, and eldest son of Secretary of State John Hay, fell from a window in the third story of the New Haven house in this city shortly before 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning and was instantly killed.

The dead man was a graduate of Yale, of the class of '98, and his death occurred on the eve of the university commencement, which brought him here Saturday, and in which by virtue of his class office, the young man would have been one of the leaders. The terrible tragedy has cast a gloom over the whole city. The full details of the accident will never be known. Mr. Hay had rooms at the New Haven house for commencement week. It is generally supposed, however, that after going to his room he went to the window for air, sitting on the sill, he dozed off and, overbalancing,

Fell to the Pavement

below, a fall of fully sixty feet. The fall resulted in instant death, and within fifteen minutes the body had been identified as that of young Hay. How it all happened became a matter of speculation on the part of the throng of curious spectators who gathered, and a subject of mournful inquiry for the classmates and friends of the young man. Half a dozen physicians who were hastily summoned were unable to do anything and the body awaited its disposition at the orders of the coroner's deputy, Medical Examiner Bartlett. That official pronounced it a case of accidental death and reported to his superior, Coroner Mix. The body was removed as soon as possible to the rooms of a near-by undertaker where it awaited instructions from the family. Repeated efforts to locate Secretary Hay by wire were futile until the early morning hours, when a request from the father reached Mr. Seth Moseley, the proprietor of the hotel, to care for the body until the members of the family could reach town. Meanwhile the sensation occasioned by the tragedy continued.

Secretary Hay Prostrated.

Hon. John Hay, secretary of state, arrived in New Haven from Washington at 5:45 p. m. in response to the dispatch announcing the sudden death of his son, Adelbert S. Hay. Mr. Hay was unaccompanied, and gave signs of great grief. He entered a carriage and was driven immediately to the residence of Mr. Seth Moseley, 38 Wall street. Worn out with the long trip from the capital and only within the walls of the house that sheltered the remains of his dead son, the secretary collapsed. His prostration was so complete that medical aid was deemed necessary, and Dr. Gilbert was summoned. Dr. Gilbert said that the illness of the secretary is apparently not serious. The physician said: "Mr. Hay is simply overwhelmed by the tragic death of his son and is suffering from a prostration which will probably be relieved by sufficient rest."

Miss Helen Hay, a daughter of the secretary, arrived in New Haven from Boston at 7:10 p. m.

BLOODY TRAGEDY

LOUISVILLE MAN MURDERS A WOMAN AND THEN COMMITS SUICIDE.

WOMAN IS HORRIBLY MUTILATED

Police Find Her Corpse Rammed Into a Closet—She Had Been Choked to Death and Terribly Mutilated—The Man Died From Wounds Self-Inflicted With a Pistol and Razor.

Louisville, Ky., June 25.—The death of H. S. Church early yesterday morning was the second act of a bloody tragedy that began in Louisville three days ago with the murder of Emily Stuart, but which did not come to light until late Saturday night when the police found the horribly mutilated body of the woman hidden in a closet and in the same house the man dying from wounds self-inflicted with pistol and razor. Several pistol shots near Twelfth and Market streets caused Policemen Finnegan, Webb and Hueghlin to enter the small frame building at 1215 West Market street, occupied by H. S. Church as a grocery store and residence, the living rooms being just back of the grocery. The policemen saw through a window clouds of smoke from a pistol. They forced an entrance and found Church propped up in a chair bleeding from a big wound in his left breast with a 45-caliber Colts revolver and from a slash across his left wrist made with a razor. On the floor was an empty bottle labeled laudanum. Church gave utterance only to

His Death Groans.

He was gotten to a hospital but died without making a statement. Police Lieutenant Meyer and four officers began to search the premises. This would have been abandoned as fruitless of special result had not the blood-stained hem of a woman's white garment been seen protruding from the crack of a closet door. The officers opened the door and saw at a glance that a woman had been horribly murdered and her corpse rammed into the closet. There was a big wound on the right side of the face and a gingham abron was tied tightly around her neck. "She was choked to death," said the coroner when he arrived. A physician said the woman had been dead forty-eight hours. The blood had come from the wound on her face which the policeman thought had been made by the stamp of a shoe heel. The woman was identified as Emily Stuart from a letter dated New York found in a bureau drawer which the coroner said "was a love letter and unsigned." Another in the same handwriting, unsigned and dated Chicago, was also found.

One of them, William Loucary of Bastrop county, has known Cortez since 1892, and Deputy Sheriff Choate of Karnes county has known him for several years. They both positively identified the prisoner and said there is absolutely no doubt that he is the man whom they have known all these years as Gregorio Cortez and who killed Sheriff Morris of Karnes county and Sheriff Glover of Gonzales county. The identification is complete and the alleged murderer will be surrendered to the officers from the interior.

WADDELL WINS DERBY.

Big Crowd at Chicago Treated to a Surprise.

Chicago, June 25.—Before the largest crowd that ever went to Washington Park track, and for the largest amount of money ever at stake except in the memorable race of 1893, Robert Waddell Saturday won the fourteenth American Derby. On his back sat John Bullman, who rode the American Derby winner of one year ago. Back of the sturdy Virginia gelding finished the pick of American three-year-olds from East, West and South. W. T. Shafer's Terminus, a Tennessee colt belonging to a seventeen-year-old lad now attending school at Nashville, finished second, and R. T. Wilson Jr.'s The Parader, pride of the East and the selection of the betting men, came in a poor third, with the others badly beaten.

THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS

Freight rates from Manila to Hong Kong, a distance of only 700 miles, are as much from San Francisco to Hong Kong, a distance of 8,000.

The "abandoned" farms of Massachusetts are fast being taken up. Three years ago there were 330 thus classed in the state. A recent enumeration shows there are now but 136.

In Brittany and the lower Pyrenees fairs are held annually at which the peasant girls assemble to sell their hair. Parisian dealers are the chief custmers, purchasing many thousand pounds.

The Philippines touch closely upon the gutta percha belt, yet the tree does not grow there indigenuously, and it is at least very problematical whether it can be cultivated there. It will not grow in Cochin, China, likewise near the gutta percha belt, because the average temperature is too low and the changes too sudden.

The emperor of Morocco has a very peculiar band. His private musicians are 80 in number and they all play clarionets, which were made by a London firm. Curiously enough they are all in one key. The emperor takes great delight in listening to the 80 clarionets being blown simultaneously, but he can not convince his court that "music hath charms."

Some curious botanical experiments made at a zoological laboratory at Naples are reported by Hans Winkler. A flowerless aquatic plant, that grows normally with its roots in the sand and leaves in water, was inverted, specimens being placed with the leaves buried in the sand and the roots in water in strong light. The roots changed to stems and leaves, the buried parts becoming roots.

"Not if I were as rich as Croesus," recently objected an American who is supposed to be worth $400,000,000. Unhappily for Croesus, "the bubble reputation" may petrify as well as burst. Archaeologists digging among the libraries of Asia discovered the inventory of Croesus, and found that that fraud of a millionaire was worth only $9,000,000. America swarms with Croesuses who could buy up the typical rich man of the olden time.

A great sensation has been caused in Vienna by an order for the arrest of a member of the Austrian Parliament, named Franz Krempa, who is accused of highway robbery in the district of Tarnow. The prosecution claims that Krempa, at the head of a band of ten peasants, waylaid a man named Rusinowsky, a horse dealer, robbed him of a considerable amount of cash, and beat him until he was insensible. Krempa belonged to the Polish People's Party, and is now missing.

Every time that Russia "bluffs" England and gains a diplomatic victory, says a wise observer, a certain marketable quantity of prestige is transferred from one nation to the other. He adds that trade cannot flourish nor subject races be governed without an ample store of prestige to draw upon at will. It is an interesting fact that the first but now obsolete meaning of prestige is illusion, imposture. Unfortunately, the element of trickery in diplomacy, whereby national prominence has been gained throughout the history of foreign governments, is by no means obsolete.

Doctor Dussaud of Paris has invented a cinematograph, by means of which blind persons can experience the illusion of moving objects as people with sight do an illuminated screen. The appartus consists of a machine that causes a series of reliefs, representing trees, birds or other objects, to pass rapidly under the fingers. The reliefs are so graduated that the delicate sense of touch possessed by the blind translates their variations into apparent movements of the objects represented. Doctor Dussaud employs the appartus mainly for educational purposes. He has also devised a system of electric vibrations for conveying to the deaf an impression of musical rhythm.

In the Interstate Park near Taylor's Falls, Minnesota, has been discovered a singular group of "giants' kettles," or pot-holes, covering an area of two or three acres and ranging in diameter from less than a foot to 25 feet, and in depth from one foot to 84 feet. They have been bored in exceedingly hard rock, and in many cases they are like wells in shape, the ratio of width to depth varying from one to five up to one to seven. Mr. Warren Upham ascribes their origin to torrents falling through glacial "moulins" at the time when the northern territory of the United States was buried under ice. As with similar pot holes elsewhere, rounded boulders are occasionally found at the bottom of the cavities.

In northwestern Montana, near the British line, there is a lake the waters of which flow through the St. Mary river to Hudson bay. The divide between the lake and the head waters of the Milk river, an affluent of the Missouri, is so low that engineers say it would be feasible to divert the outlet from Canadian to American territory. As water for irrigation is highly valued on both sides of the line, the question whether the United States has a right to divert it is one of international interest, and may yet become important.

KILL OFF WHITES

A FANATICAL SEMI-RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF SOUTHERN NEGROES.

FOSTER WAS THE FIRST VICTIM

Organized for the Purpose of Murdering Whites and Called the Church of the Living God—Two Leaders Lynched—Edwards, Who Killed Foster and Is Still at Large, Also a Leader.

New Orleans, June 22.—The explanation offered for the lynching of Prophet Smith and F. D. McLand, the negroes lynched by the mob in Bossier parish, La., is that they were the leaders of a negro mafia, a fanatical semi-religious society which had in view the murder of whites, and that Foster, who was killed by Prince Edwards, was formally and officially selected by the society to be murdered. The name of the organization is the Church of the Living God, and it was organized at Houston, Tex., with Prophet Frank Smith as its head under the title of worthy shepherd. McLand was worthy treasurer, and Edwards, who killed Foster, and for whom the mob is still searching, with the intention of lynching, was worthy secretary.

Culminated in Lynching.

Nearly a year ago the negroes comprising the Church of the Living God to the number of 100, moved from Texas to the Foster plantation at once; Smith remained in Shreveport, where he was very successful in securing converts. He was finally ordered to leave Shreveport by the chief of police of that city on the ground that his sermons were inflammatory and tended to cause trouble between negroes and whites. From Shreveport the prophet moved to the Foster plantation, where, being surrounded by his congregation, he was all powerful, and the trouble which culminated in his lynching was precipitated. The religion preached by Prophet Smith was a wild fanatical one, based on the book of Revelation.

Reformers From the Ranks of the Old Parties Launch It.

Kansas City, June 21. — The allied third party movement, which its promoters hope will result before 1904 in a national organization strong enough to name a presidential candidate, was launched here yesterday afternoon. It was the outcome of a conference of reformers from the ranks of the old parties and its principles are said to be some to be adopted to suit the views of W. J. Bryan. The conference was called by Lee Merriwether of St. Louis, who, with twenty-two other St. Louis leaders in the public ownership movement of that city, came to Kansas City Tuesday after a visit to Mr. Bryan at Lincoln, where the intentions of the delegation had been laid before the Nebraska statesman. WHEN the RAIN is OVER

When the rain is over,
  When the clouds have pass'd,
And the golden sunshine
  Beams again at last;
And the earth is fairer,
  Ev'ry fashioned flow'r
Lifts its head to answer;
  "Thank you, little show'r!"
When the show'r is over,
  When the rain is done,
Nature's all the sweeter,
  Brighter shines the sun.

When the tears are over,
  When the pain has pass'd,
And the smiles and dimples
  Come again at last;
Never mind the bruises,
  Laugh away the fears;
Answer like the flowers;
  "Thank you, little tears!"
When the tears are over,
  Smiles come back again;
Life is all the sweeter
  For the drops of rain!

The Rescue of Regalla.

BY KATE M. CLEARY.

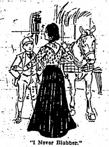
"Thou art glad when Hassan mounts
  the saddle,
Thou are glad he owns thee; so am
  I!"
—Bayard Taylor.

Reggie's contempt was ill-concealed. "You goose!" he said to his sister. "Here you're blubberin' all over Williewinkie's neck."

Miss Adelaide Carlender, still young enough to quarrel with Reggie, promptly whisked her handkerchief into her sleeve and straightened up with much dignity. She had given Williewinkle her own little black pony to Reggie the fall before when she and Clive Harland had decided they were quite unsuited to each other and that there was no earthly use in attempting to patch up this latest quarrel.

"For I never shall ride again," Adelaide had said heartbrokenly. "Never!" Now, when once more the roads were white and firm in the city boulevards, and the bougeoning trees on either hand spoke of the summer, and all distant lanes in emerald leaf invited to joyous freedom and bounding activity, there had come to Adelaide a queer heartsick feeling that was almost like nostalgia—a longing for what had been—for what might never be again. Oh, the rides they'd had just a year ago—she on Williewinkle—Clive on Regalla. The dewy mornings, with the incense of earliest wayside blooms rising fragrant to greet them. Brown buds of oak and maple were swelling then. And in the city parks were the delicious signs of coming summer—those parks where already the grey-coated sparrows and the red-coated robins held glorious matins!

Now, Clive had gone abroad with his people. The fine home to the right was closed. The society journal declared the family might return in the fall. There were some hints thrown out of Clive's enthusiastic reception in English society, and of his engagement to the daughter of an English baronet. All this Adelaide learned before she had come down here with her parents to open their summer home. But it seemed to be borne in upon her with fresh force when she found herself once more in the familiar stables, with her arm around Williewinkle's neck, and Williewinkle's brown nose poking into her palm for sugar.

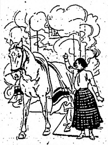


"I Never Blubber."

"I never blubber," Adelaide assured her small brother with a wan smile she meant to be chilly and lofty "And I—I think you ought to be more—more grateful—after my giving you Williewinkle."

Now Reggie was only eleven, but he was wise in his generation. He knew Adelaide did not care a snap for Williewinkle since her surrender of him. And he too had pleasant memories of Clive's largesse the previous spring.

"Oh, that's all right," he returned magnificently. "I was only stringin' a bit. But—say! Do you know they've sent Regalla down with the other horses, and her beast of a groom is runnin' her knee-sprung and fodderin' her to beat the band?"



"I Saved Regalla."

Adelaide's crisp duck morning skirt rustled. Adelaide's pink hat of shirred liberty silk slipped back on her neck. Adelaide's two big gold-brown braids were suddenly whisked over her shoulder in the agitation of her swift sweep around.

"No! Is he though? I've a mind—a good mind to give him a talking."

"Sho!" ejaculated Reggie loftily. "As though he'd mind a girl."

But that night when Adelaide had turned her pretty ringleted head a dozen times on the pillow, and finally succeeded in cantering off to the pleasant world of dreamland, it was to find that Williewinkle and Regalla were both there before her and were having a glorious gallop down a slope of sunny sward, quite ignoring the imperative cries which followed them to halt!

And suddenly she was sitting up in bed, with Reggie's voice in her ears and queer smell of smoke in her nostrils.

"I say—oh, Ade, I say the Harland stables are on fire. Don't you hear the men shouting? What did you want to bolt your door for? I thought I'd never get in. They're bringing the volunteer fire department up from town, but it will be too late—I know it will. Say! What are you doing—where are you going?"

For Adelaide had promptly plunged her head into a basin of cold water, tossed the mass of heavy wet hair back over her shoulders, secured it with a heavy bone pin, and—tumbling into the golf costume which happened to be the nearest clothing at hand—was tugging at her shoes and jerking out the laces by way of saving the trouble of securing them.

"For Regalla!" gasped Adelaide, and then she was gone.

When Reggie got back to the Harland stables never a glimpse could he catch of his daring sister. His father was there, as was his big brother, and they were half-distracted. Some one had seen Adelaide enter the burning building. She had not emerged as far as was known. And the place was doomed. For over the puny streams of water, over the blaze that lit the surrounding spaces, over the harsh and exultant crackle of the flames, rose the agonised and half human neighs and trumpetings of imprisoned beasts. Colonel Carlender tore around like a madman. "My daughter is in there!" he screamed. "A thousand dollars to the man who brings her out!"

But the man who attempted the rescue, the man who had ridden out from the town depot where he had just left his train, at sight of the flames, and who now dropped from his horse only to rush into the burning building, was beaten back—conquered.

"She had a knife!" cried a stentorian voice.

"I seen her dip a horse-blanket in a trough and cover her head with it," howled another.

"Who was she?" shouted the newcomer, who had attempted to enter the building. "Who was she?"

A hundred voices in unison answered him: "Squire Callender's daughter!" they said.

Just then a cry of horror rent the air—the cupola had fallen with a crash. And just then, as the bystanders banded in an attempt to keep the stranger from again attempting an entrance, two muffled figures were distinguishable through the smoke. One—they seemed, for the heads of both were covered by the folds of a blanket already blazing, and down dropped as they staggered out the knife with which the halter of Regalla had been cut.

"Save him!" panted Adelaide, as she fell in her father's arms. "It's his horse—Clive's. I saved—Regalla!"

When she regained consciousness in the blue calm of the summer dawn, it was not in those same arms she awoke. For her lover was holding her as though he would never let her go, and his adoring eyes were beaming down upon her. "My brave darling!" he said. "I had just got in on the midnight train. My first thought was for Regalla. But when I knew you were there—you—No, no! You will not be disfigured at all, thank God! But, even if you were—oh, my gallant girl—oh, my best beloved!"

HOW THE FISHES BREATHE.

Water Should Be Aerated to Give Them Vitality.

The gills of a fish are situated at the back part of the sides of the head, and consist of a number of vascular membranes, which are generally in double, fringe-like rows, fixed by the base only; sometimes these are feather-like, and sometimes they are mere folds of membrane attached at each end over the gill cavities. In general there are four gills on each side, though in some fish there are more. In fishes that have bones the gills are attached to the outer edge of bony arches connected with the bone of the tongue and with the base of the skull, the connection at each end being by intervening small bones, while the cavity containing the gills on each side of the head is covered by a bony plate with two subordinate pieces. It is by the movement of these bony plates that the water is expelled which is taken in through the mouth, and which, after passing among the gills and supplying them with air, passes out by the gill opening at the back of the head. The fish is a cold-blooded animal—that is, its temperature is very slightly above that of the water in which it lives, and it therefore needs but little oxygen to keep the blood warm enough to sustain its life. This oxygen, supplied to the blood by the gills in respiration, is not obtained by decomposing the water, but by separating the air from it. It is, therefore, necessary that the water in which fish live should be supplied with air, and this is one of the direct benefits of the agitation of oceans and lakes by winds. Fishes confined in aquariums often die for this very reason—because the water is not aerated. They consume all the oxygen in the closed vessel in which they are placed, and no more being supplied, they die, and may be said to be drowned, because they perish from the same cause that occasions death by drowning in lung breathing animals—that is, want of air.—Golden Days.

Dress Fastenings.

Buttons are being used much more than the invisible hook-and-eye that was always striving to creep into notice—of the past few years. No one especial kind of button is in vogue. They are used with due reference to the material of the dress. With figured silk, brocade or velvet a small fancy button of enamel, metal or jeweled is good. With plain silk or satin a small crochet button is preferred. Smooth cloths have tailor buttons of the same material, and cheviot, tweed, homespun, etc., are fastened with horn, bone or smoked pearl buttons.

Common Lilac Long Known.

The common lilac, which is known to botanists as syringa vulgaris, has been in cultivation for over 300 years, and its native home is said to be on the mountainous regions of Central Europe, from Piedmont to Hungary, whence it was introduced to cultivation in 1597. Botanists recognize about 12 species of lilacs, found in a wild state, and these are native from southwestern Europe through Central Asia and the Himalayas to Mongolia, Northern China, and Japan. None of the species is a native of the American continent.

The Cat.

Our friend the cat is called kat in Danish and Dutch, katt in Swedish, chat in French, katti or katze in German, catus in Latin, gatto in Italian, gato in Portuguese and Spanish, kot in Polish, kots in Russia, kott in Turkish, cath in Welsh, kath in Cornish, catua in Basque, and gox or katz in Armenian.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Back to Grey Oaks rode its proud possessor, but his handsome face was very pale, and in his glittering eyes was a light which betokened no mood for trifling.

At the lodge gates he drew rein, his horse white with foam.

"Tyrrell!" he called.

The man appeared in answer at the lodge door.

"Have you made up your mind? Have you concluded to give up the papers? I gave you an hour to decide."

"I can't give what I ain't got," was the surly answer. "I never stole no papers!"

"And the man I told you to keep under close watch you let escape you. You steal, you lie and you disobey me. Do you fancy there is no limit to my patience? Well, there is, and you have reached it. After to-day you are no longer in my service."

"You mane that, Mr. Chester?" said the man, coming a step nearer, his question holding, perhaps, unconscious menace in its tone.

"Yes, I mean it," answered the master, "and take care how you act and what you say on leaving me. You may think you hold a little power in your hands. Try to use it, and I'll throw you in prison within twenty-four hours. What do you think you could say against Grey Oaks' master to which the world would listen? Pshaw! Why do I bandy words with you? Go, you idle, drunken cur, and never let me see or hear of you again. It's what I ought to have done long ago. There's one condition, however, on which I will keep you. Give me the papers you stole that night, and I'll pension you for the rest of your life—remember, the rest of your life. It'll not last long, by the way. Whisky will soon make way for the undertaker, though such a carcass as yours don't deserve decent burial."

And he rode off, with a coarse, brutal laugh.

"That'll bring him," he mused. "I'll have the papers before nightfall. He's got them, I know. I could read the lie in his face. But I can't afford, in any case, to turn the fellow loose, only it won't do harm to frighten him."

Meanwhile Tyrrell had not stirred hand or foot from the spot where his master had left him, but the expression upon his face was not good to see.

The sullenness had awakened from its usual torpor to something akin to action; the malignity of a terrible hate shone in his eyes: the coarse, thick lips were nearly white, in contrast to the deep red of his swollen cheeks.

At last he spoke aloud and to himself:

"And you'd be turning me away like a dog, Mister Chester, and it's my carcass that's not worth decent burial? Shure, then, it's on your may the crows feast! And it's on the papers you're afther wanting—the papers as she said she'd prove his innocence? Well, you and me is in league with the devil. If he hasn't run away with 'em, maybe I'll be afther giving 'em to ye; but it ain't done for love, belave that, and keep out o' Tyrrell O'Byrne's way on a dark night, or it may be the worse for ye. I'll go and think it all over. Between now and nightfall I might change my mind."

He turned and went into the lodge. As he did so, a man strolled up to the door.

"You pardon!" he said, "but I've been an unseen listener to your conversation that just took place between you and your master. Do you know I think I might show you a way out of his clutches? You don't like him—neither do I. Let's work together."

"I don't mind hearing what you've got to say," assented Tyrrell, and invited his stranger guest to enter.

Ten minutes later the men were in earnest colloquy, while between them was a steaming jug.

And, strange to say, as the man talked, the tones of his voice were singularly like the voice of the old man who had taken so abrupt a departure but a few hours before.

But to Beatrice, the long hours brought no hope nor respite from her torturing thoughts.

One picture was ever present before her. It was the picture that she had last seen as the three men once more had dragged her lover from her sight.

For this they had toiled. For this they had waited. And her appeal to Bertie had brought it all about.

Cora, too, had deceived her—Cora, the little friend whom she had so trusted!

And she had had reason to fear the terrible and subtle power Chester had acquired over her! It had been a presentiment, and she had not heeded it!

But what were her sufferings compared with Bertie's?

Once more he would be placed in the prisoner's dock. They would take good care this time that he should not escape them.

They would swear away his liberty! They would make him a convict! Oh, had Randolph Chester no mercy? Was there no tender spot in the flint of his soul that she might reach?

She sprang to her feet, and began pacing anew the room, when, as if in answer to her latter thought, the door opened to admit him who had been its object.

"Beatrice," he said, "I have come to you for the last time, to tell you that I believe before nightfall I shall be in possession of the papers which may prove your birth legitimate. You must let no false hope be aroused, for I am not yet quite sure; but if I am right, I wish to give them to you on one condition as your Christmas gift—in accepting them, you accept me with them! If you refuse, I swear to you that I will destroy them in a fire so hot that not even their ashes shall remain, and that henceforth and forever the world shall believe that your mother possessed no prouder title to your father's love and honor than his—"

"Hush!" she interrupted. "Ah, merciful heaven, spare me this last foul insult from your lips!"

"I do not wish to hurt you, Beatrice; but so the world will name her, and the world shall have the story in all its bearings. Why should I show you mercy—who show none to me? Is it not madness to persist longer in your refusal? What does it entail upon you for the future? Your dead father's dishonor—your own inheritance of both—the man you love a convict, your home a mad house! Look on the other hand: I clear from the dead the stain that clings to them! I will give back to Bertram Talbot the freedom he has forfeited! I will make your life happy! For the sake of the dead and of the living—for the dead, whose voices would unite with mine, and for the living, whom your refusal will clothe in the convict's garb—I bid you pause! Must I not love you well that I should make to you this prayer?"

Beatrice's brain was reeling. His words held to her the confused meaning of a dream.

What was left to her but to yield? She was in the spider's web, and no merciful hand would free her, as her's had freed the tiny, fluttering fly.

She could but struggle on until death proved her deliverer—struggle on with the tain forever resting on the white hem of her dead mother's shroud, and pay the forfeit of her lover's liberty.

Why not end the hopeless battle, accept defeat herself, and wrap those she loved best in the mantle of an unsullied honor? What matter the cost of such an end?

"Leave me!" she murmured, in a voice so low and faint he scarce could catch the words. "To-night bring me the papers, prove all that you have said true, and—and—I—consent!"

A wild wave of absolute rapture swept over Randolph Chester's face. He had schemed, and plotted, and toiled, and at lastat last, victory was within his grasp!

Once Beatrice Markham was his wife, what mattered all the rest? Position, fortune, honor—these would be secured to him, and revenge, revenge for every slight she had offered him, revenge for the very love he bore her, the love which at this moment surged so madly in his soul!

Before she had divined or could prevent his purpose he had caught her hands in his and strained them to his lips.

As though their touch had been like burning fire, she snatched them from his hold and stood an instant, outraged and defiant, only the next to remember that this was but the first payment of the debt.

But he made neither complaint nor appeal, as he silently went out from her presence.

Once more she was alone. Again she paced the limits of her room, until, exhausted, she would rest, only to begin anew.

The short afternoon deepened into the shadow of evening.

In the dim light she stood by her window, looking out, when suddenly she saw, standing beneath it, a man, half concealed by the trunk of a giant oak against which he leaned. Yet she imagined his eyes fixed on her window.

Suddenly he drew a handkerchief from his pocket and cautiously waved it toward her.

Who was he?

She looked more closely, and fancied it the figure of Tyrrell, the lodgekeeper. Surely, he could want nothing of her. Yet he was beckoning to her. It might be a fresh trap, but at least it could be nothing more terrible. Her promise of to-day precluded that.

The ghost of a tiny hope stalked by her side, as she swiftly sped down the stairway and through the empty halls to the place where he stood awaiting her. He waited still.

"You wanted to see me?" she said.

"Yes, miss," he answered. "I just heard as how my master was going to marry ye, and, bad as I am, I'm not bad enough to let that happen. If—if I get ye out of his clutches, ye'll help me out of the clutches of the law? Promise me this."

"I promise—I swear it! But speak—speak quickly!"

"It's the papers, miss, as ye said would prove your lover innocent—will they be afther showing the guilty man?"

"No, Tyrrell, no; but they will enable me to wrest myself forever from Mr. Chester's cruel power. Oh, if you can help me, do it! Was it you who tore the papers from my hands? If so, give them back to me, and I will thank you on my knees."

"Your knees, Miss Beatrice—your knees to me? Oh, no! Shure, I'd soon be telling ye all the wretched truth when ye talk like that. But come with me, and let what will happen to Tyrrell O'Byrne, the devil to whom he sold himself'll find one white spot on his soul for this hour's work. It's safe and shure I've hid 'em away, but I've not sure I've hidden 'em away, but I've not forgotten the hiding place. It came back to me just now like a vision, and I said to myself as it was a sign that ye were to have what belonged to ye."

As he talked, they walked rapidly along side by side. Beatrice's heart was beating loudly. The ghost of her hope was taking bodily shape and substance now.

Suddenly Tyrrell paused. Just here was a place between two blocks of stone in the solid wall of the house, large enough, perhaps, to admit a man's hand. Without hesitation—secure, exultant—he thrust in his, only the next moment to withdraw it, with a deep groan and a muttered curse.

Some one had been there before him. The papers had been stolen for the second time!

CHAPTER XXXV.

"They're gone, miss!" blurted Tyrrell—"they're clane gone! Oh, don't look at me like that, with his eyes, miss—the eyes he fixed on me when they asked him to point out the thief!"

But the latter part of his sentence fell on deaf ears. The papers were gone—the papers which, in her possession, might have redeemed all. Once more the structure of her newly-born hope proved to be built on the sand. Once more she lay, crushed and hopeless, among its ruins.

A sudden kindly impulse stirred her toward the poor wretch cowering near her. It prompted her to stretch out toward him her hand.

"You meant to serve me, Tyrrell," she said, "and I thank you. I can offer you no other reward, for to-day you are richer than the daughter of your old master."

For months the man had listened only to harsh commands and brutal threats, which lowered him to the level of the dog.

He heard now what seemed to him the voice of an angel speaking. He fell on his knees beside her, and, catching up her dress, raised it to his lips.

"Shure, I never can do ye no good now, Miss Beatrice; and it's I as has brought all the harm upon ye."

"You? Oh, no, Tyrrell! It is your new master. Oh, what might not those papers have done for me!" she wailed, in fuller realization of her loss. "And now—and now—" Her voice died in a sob. "Why did you take them—why did you steal them from me?" she asked, bitterly.

"Bekase you seemed talking to me in the dark, miss—bekase ye said they'd prove the young feller innerent. God knows I wish ye had 'em, even if it did. I've a great mind to tell ye all the truth, Miss Beatrice. Maybe as it'd help ye, and as for me, anything's better than this dog's life, with his eyes ever peering, staring at me in the darkness or the light. It'd help me pay my debt to him, too, and I hate him—aye, I hate him! I was only a drunkard and a thief once, Miss Beatrice. It's he as has made me a villain!"

"What are you talking about, Tyrrell? Tell me, and tell me quickly!"

"And ye'll save me, Miss Beatrice—ye'll save me from the prison, or maybe worse?"

"Yes, yes! I will save you. More than that, Tyrrell, I will help you to lead a good and honest life. Only tell me what you have to say. You—you stole the papers long ago? It was you who were the thief on that dreadful night? Am I right? Is it not so?"

"Yes, miss, it's all true. The master dismissed me, as you remember, that very day—dismissed for drunkenness and without a character. I deserved it, miss; but it didn't make it none the aisier. Besides, I was not quite over my spree. Well, I had been up to the village all the evening. It was past midnight, and I was half-drunk yet, when I saw a light in the master's library.

At Edward's Coronation.

The length of the trains of the gowns which will be worn by the British peeresses of the realm at the coronation will vary according to rank.

A duchess will have a train three yards long.

A marchioness, two and a half.

Countesses are limited to two yards.

Viscountesses, to one and a half yards.

Baronesses are restricted to a one-yard train.

Only peeresses in their own right—that is to say, who owe their peerage not to marriage, but to their birth, or else to a special grant by the sovereign to them in person, will have the right to have their trains borne by a page, who must not be over the age of fourteen.

The Electric Eel's Victim.

At the zoological gardens a large electric eel was swimming in his tank with more activity than usual, when a big cockroach fell into the water, and in its efforts to get out made a disturbance on the surface which attracted the attention of the eel. The eel turned around, swam past it, discharged its battery at about eight inches off, and the cockroach instantly dropped stone dead. It did not even move its antennae after. The eel then proceeded to swallow its victim, and the narrator goes on to point out the curious circumstance that the fish, which weighed about twelve pounds, should find it worth while to fire its heavy artillery at a creature an inch and a half long, when he could easily have swallowed it sans facon.—National Review.

AFFIRMED.

Mrs. Adams and Cunningham Win Their Suits.

The supreme court last week handed down a decision in the case for damages against the city of Thief River Falls and the Great Northern railroad brought by Mrs. Cunningham and Mrs. Adams, of St. Hilaire. The court holds that Mrs. Cunningham is entitled to $2,500 and Mrs. Adams $3,500. The Great Northern will eventually have to pay the judgments and it is understood that it will not be necessary to bring a suit to force the company to pay.

Have Organized.

The newly elected school board held a meeting last week and organized by electing the following officers:

President—Horace Bagley.
Clerk—Lars Backe.
Treasurer—C. E. Winslow.

James A. Wilson has been elected principal and superintendent, and there will be twelve more teachers employed, several of whom have already been elected. A uniform system of free text books will be introduced in the schools, and a high school building will probably be built this summer.

The Great Northwest's First Child.

One of the most remarkable proofs of the amazing growth of that vast region of our country commonly called the Northwest, with its numerous sisterhood of States and its population of more than seven million people, is the fact that it is only a little more than eighty years since the first white baby was born there. The child was a girl the daughter of a regular army officer, and she is still living. A fascinating account of her eventful life, the early years of which were spent among soldiers and savages, will appear in an early issue of The Ladies' Home Journal.

Fruit Raising a Success.

The question as to whether fruits can be successfully raised in northern Minnesota has so far been answered principally in the negative. It has always been contended that the climate would not permit apples, plums, pears, cherries or grapes the wild varieties excepted to mature or even to pass the critical stage between bud and fruit. That this idea is a fallacy can be easily proved by any person who will take the trouble to come to St. Hilaire and see for themselves.

The writer last week visited personally the place known as the Cliffgard Farm, two miles from St. Hilaire and there saw as healthy an orchard of fruit trees as could be wished for anywhere. The orchard contains about 400 apple trees, embracing eight or nine choice varieties, nearly all of which were fruit bearing—some were too young. Fruit has ripened fully on these trees for some years past. We also saw a fine grape arbor, nicely laden with fruit; cherries, several varieties, all fruit bearing; plums, almost overladen with healthy fruit; raspberries, blackberries currants strawberries, etc., everything in perfect health and highly productive.

The farm referred to has been for many years the property of Ole Cliffgard who farmed it successfully and who planted all of the fruits referred to in this article. Last fall it was sold to C. Moe who now runs the place.

Mr. John Ricketson well known in Crookston, Minn., and who has been engaged for half a century at least in fruit culture in New York State, visited this farm two weeks ago and was very agreeably surprised at what he saw. He said that the young fruit was as healthy and well developed as any he had ever seen in his native state at the same time of year.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Julius Pleth, the land man we were enabled to spend a couple of pleasant hours looking over this model fruit garden and we left there fully convinced that almost any kind of fruit can be grown successfully in this part of the country. It is to be regretted however that such scenes cannot be seen more frequently in this great Red River Valley acknowledged to be one of the best farming countries in the world.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

FROM EXCHANGES.

An exchange tells of a lady who decided to scare her husband, who was quite a hard drinker so he would reform. To do this she procured the costume of a devil she had seen at a masquerade. The next time the erring spouse came home feeling happy she quickly donned the costume, and as he opened the door she stepped forward and said in sepulchral tone, "Come with me; I am the devil." The result was rather startling, as the response to her greeting was, "Zat so? Shake hands, old boy, I'm your brother in law; I married your sister."

An enthusiastic exchange says that South Dakota takes the cake when you talk about fertile soils. A farmer planted a small house 10x12 on his quarter section and the next year it had grown into a large pleasant farm house with green blinds and veranda attachment; his pump had grown into a windmill and instead of one cow he had a whole herd. His land had run over its boundary and covered three quarters of a section. He had grown from a slim dyspeptic person to an individual of over two hundred and his pocket book had grown so heavy he had to invest in government bonds. Who says Dakota soil is not productive?

There is a proposition to interest the Woodmen in the work of forest preservation this work being one which is held to be peculiarly suited to this order because of its name and its implied interest in all things that pertain to forests. There is no question as to the value of the forests, or as to the effect that the work of a body of several thousand men would have in protecting them, but the advisability of a campaign for forest preservation on the part of an organization which exists primarily for insurance purposes and whose name is more or less of an accident is some what doubtful.

The Great Northern weed burner was at work on this branch last week. It passes slowly along the track and is so arranged that a quantity of oil is consumed from burners which pass over 12 feet of space directly behind the engine, and kills all vegetation life within its range.

Conductor Lockman says that the track on this branch is not as smooth as the New York Central's, the recent rains having softened up the roadbeds in spots. A sag in the rails threw one of the cars off the track Thursday and two hours of jacking up was necessary before the procession started again.

It seems that State Auditor Dunn and the state drainage board are not agreed as to when the $50,000 appropriated by the last legislatue for drainage in the Red River Valley shall be spent. In the opinion of Mr. Dunn the $25,000 available for this year should not be spent at present, but should be held until the balance is availabe. He belives that the money could be spent more economically and to greater advantage in this way.

There is a probability that all the lumber camps in the northern part of the state will be burned down this summer by order of the board of health. During the past two winters the many camps have been breeding places for smallpox, and it is found that the disease will develop in more deadly form next winter unless heroic measures are taken for its suppression. This project has been in the minds of the state board for some time, and has been broached before.

G. W. Peck, of Argyle, and W. E. Wood, of Warren, two county commissioners from Marshall county, were in the city last week. Asked as to the sentiment in the western portion of Marshall county regarding the matter of forming new county out of the eastern part of Marshall county and the northern part of Red Lake county they stated that there would be no opposition. In fact the people of the western end desire to let the east half off any time it desires to go.

Celebrate the Fourth of July in Thief River Falls.

Pumpkins are getting ripe up at Rollis and H. E. Mussey is going and start a newspaper. And he will have competition.

In almost every locality of the pine woods the blueberry crop will be the largest known for years. When the last frost visited us on May 24, the young berries were as large as bird shot and were not injured, and the copious rains during the last week have brought forward the berries almost to full size and in a few days we will enjoy the most luscious of all summer fruit. A large berry crop means much to the laboring classes in this region, and thousands of bushels will be gathered during the next two months, to tickle the palates of the cities and to enrich the pickers who will be numbered by the thousands.—Cass Lake Voice.

Bids wanted for grading highway. Commencing at a point 8 rods due west of the northeast corner of section 31 and running due west 25 rods. Said grade to be 16 feet wide at the bottom and 14 feet wide at the top, and to be on an average two feet high. Bids will be opened at the residence of C. E. Purdy on July 8 at 2 o'clock p. m. Right reserved to reject any and all bids. By order of the Supervisors of the Town of North.

One of the prettiest weddings ever celebrated in Thief River Falls took place yesterday forenoon, and John Herman Bishoff, of Red Lake Falls, became the husband of one of the fairest ladies of this city, Miss Thresa Victoline Bourque. The ceremony was performed in the Catholic church and was celebrated by high mass. The church was very prettily decorated with ferns and a large number of friends were present. The bride wore a beautiful dress of white silk organdy, while the groom was dressed in conventional black and wore white gloves. After the wedding a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents and at noon they took the train for Buffalo, N. Y., where they will spend a month.

The Honest Liar

Here's to the man who lies to us, who's careless of the truth,
Who slaps us on the back and says, "Gee! how you hold your youth!"
Who shrinks not at the future when he has a lie to tell,
But, when you're sick and tired and blue, declares, "You're looking well!"

Here's to the man who tells us lies when solemn truth would hurt,
Who says: "I'll back you through and through, if it should take my shirt."
Who, when you're "off" and cannot write just as you think you should,
Will tune you up for better things, with, "That's what I call good!"

Or, when you paint a picture that is wrong in every part,
Will make you think the daub is great by saying, "Now, that's art!"
He lies—but it's in charity, if lying ever was,
So, here's his health, for, though he lies, he's honest when he does.

The Fire Edition.

By VICTOR A. HERMANN.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

All was excitement in the reportorial room. Outside, on either side of the Times iron building, a dozen structures were crumbling in the mighty grasp of the fire warrior. It was the worst conflagration since the memorable south-side blaze. At any moment those at the night desk might have to throw down their pencils and rush down to the smoke choked thoroughfare.

Ezra Spease, the city editor, came out of his little office just as the walls of White's cracker factory tumbled in with a muffled roar.

"Whew! Getting pretty close, boys, but I guess we can stand it."

"Old Spease" was on friendly terms with everyone, from the "devil" to the associate editor.

Then the old man walked over to the window. The vast columns of smoke and the reddened sky made an exaggerated spectacle; one could have sworn the whole city was doomed. Only a blazing mass of ruins marked the spot where the 10-story cracker factory had towered a few hours before.

As the city editor looked a thin thread of red flame wound itself up toward the drying room of the furniture house. A few moments later the inflammable interior was a seething furnace. A lone fireman stood on the roof; his nozzle pouring a continuous stream through the skylight. At times he appeared to be enveloped in a sea of flame, only to emerge like some invincible fire god.

"Whew! That's grit clear through. Where's Scott? Covering insurance? All right; send Fairbanks."

Fairbanks threw down his clipping shears and come forward.

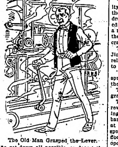
"Do you see that fireman on the roof? Well, not one man in a hundred would stay up there a minute. You are pretty fair at this sort of work; run off a little incident. We'll need all the space available for the next few days, but it'll come in good on Sunday."

Fairbanks was already making entries in his book, but the next instant a mixture of charred wood and water rattled the glass so menacingly that the two moved away.

A pronounced odor of burning varnish penetrated the building and started them all coughing.

"There's money in that varnish," said the city editor, thoughtfully. Then the opaque door of his little office was closed behind him.

And the men on the desk continued to wield their heavy pencils. Two objects were foremost in their minds; to get down all possible, or desert the building—the latter only when ordered.



The Old Man Grasped the Lever.

The only idle man in the big room was Winters. He stood drying his feet by the radiator, and frowning at the smiling piece of Italian statuary that embellished the spare desk. An unsuccessful journey in a leaky boat will ruffle even a newspaper man.

Presently old Spease's head appeared in the doorway.

"You men on the desk! Chop the foreign news in half; don't let a line of exchange matter in. We must have two more columns for the fire."

And the door again banged.

The heat of the blaze was becoming oppressive. Winters removed his coat. Then some of the others began to fumble with their collars. The crack of a blistered pane brought the city editor out.

"Hotter and hotter, boys. Well, it's lucky this building is iron."

But he began to feel a little nervous in spite of himself. Showers of burning wood began to fall around the windows, while the roaring increased until it drowned even the dull throb of the engines.

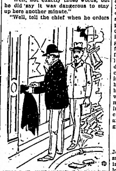
A fireman stuck his head in the door.

"The chief says you'd better come down—it's risky."

"Did the chief say we must desert the building?"

"Well, not exactly those words, but he did say it was dangerous to stay up here another minute."

"Well, tell the chief when he orders us to leave the building we'll obey. The Times hasn't dropped an issue since the day it started, and I hardly think it will do so now."



"That Is For the City Editor."

The fireman walked away and the city editor stopped at the speaking tube.

"Hello! Who is the pressroom?"

"All of us," came the response.

"Well, is everything all right? We want to run off the edition within two hours?"

"Everything running, sir; but it's terribly hot down here."

"Same up here, Jim; but I think they'll have it under control in an hour."

But one hour and then another passed and still the fire raged. The fire laddies had almost deserted the burning district, turning their efforts to the property that lay in the path of the blaze. The big reportorial room was also deserted. Not a pane had weathered the hot blasts that licked the sashes. Sparks swept through the jaggled glass and ignited a heap of exchanges that lay on the spare desk. Dense smoke filled the room and hallway.

The pressroom was a hive of activity. A score of men busied around the iron monster whose roar would drown even the noise outside. The city editor superintended the work from a mailing table. And the red liquid in the little thermometer on the wall crawled past 110.

The last cylinder was in its place. Jim grasped the lever, but his hand relaxed and the poor fellow dropped to the floor.

"It's the heat," cried old Spease, springing down to the floor, "up to the air with him!"

Then it was the old man's hand that grasped the lever.

The great mass of wheels began to revolve; slowly at first, then increasing until the noise was deafening. A bank of moist papers began to collect at one end. The mighty press was speaking. One—two—three—five—ten floor; still the old man held the lever open.

"Ten thousand copies," the city editor chuckled, "ten thousand copies." The men stared at him in admiration.

Suddenly, without warning, the wall near the big dynamo began to crumble.

"My God! Run for your life—the wall's coming in!" they cried, scrambling up the iron stairway. But the city editor did not hear their warning; his eyes were riveted on the busy wheels.

"We've never skipped an issue. Ten thousand copies; ten thousand"——

* * * * * * *

At daybreak the fire was under control. Its path had been checked by the sluggish river on one side, and a long stretch of boulevard on the other. It was now that the exhausted fire laddies took turns in devouring the sandwiches and steaming coffee that the nearby hotels sent down. The first light in the east brought thousands of spectators stumbling over the debris-strewn thoroughfare. A silhouette against the clear morning sky was the less monument to the fire fiend. It was the only structure standing within a block.

"Times Extra! All about the big fire, cries of the newsboys went ringing over the smoldering ruins. A man came out of the Times office with a long streamer of black crape. He began entwining it among the artistic work over the door.

"Why, who is that for?" inquired a reporter from the Star.

"That," and the man spoke with a tremor, "that is for the city editor."

NEW WOMAN IN WASHINGTON.

Wife of Sidkey Bey from Turkey Popular at Capital.

The ladies of the Turkish legation have not heretofore, taken any part in the social life of the capital. Mme. Ferrouh, wife of the recently recalled Turkish minister was an orthodox Mahommetan woman, and received only a few women, wives of diplomats, and no men at all. She drove out once in a while veiled to the eyes, and shrouded in a long silken coat. Her only companion was her younger sister, who, by special permission of the sultan, accompanied her to this country. Neither woman would have been allowed to leave Turkey if they had any idea of adopting American customs. Ferrouth Bey's successor, Shekib Bey, is reputed to be a widower. At all events he is unencumbered with womankind. The second secretary, Sidky Bey, has a wife, however, and a charming one, who promises to become extremely popular in the diplomatic set. She is an Armenian, and consequently a kind of a Christian. She is tall and finely formed, with a mass of jet black hair and fine dark eyes. Mme. Sidky, as she is called, was educated in the Scutari college in Constantinople, and is a highly accomplished woman, speaking five languages and conversing extremely well in all of them. Her English is altogether perfect. Mme. Sidky is also a fine singer, her voice having been carefully cultivated in Italy, where she lived for several years. Mme. Sidky is delighted with the freedom of American society, and takes a naive delight in each new custom with which she becomes familiar. Her latest fad is the bicycle, and as she is probably the first woman of her nationality who has ever mounted a wheel, her daily appearance in the park is watched for with considerable interest. She is a graceful rider, and wears most distracting bicycling gowns.—Chicago Tribune.

Indiana's Snake Mine.

A strip of abandoned land east of Jeffersonville, Ind., is alive with snakes, some of the reptiles measuring five feet in length. The field belongs to Mr. Frank Kaelin. Mr. W. W. Lyon, a civil engineer, was running the boundaries a few days ago, that the land might be fenced, and he encountered the snakes and abandoned his work. Mr. Kaelin went to the field to build the fence. The sun was warm, and the ground seemed to be covered with the crawling reptiles. Men who were with Mr. Kaelin charged on the snakes with clubs and killed 75, while many escaped. The fence was finally built, but the workmen frequently stopped to wage a war of extermination on the snakes. Then Mr. Kaelin's son started to plough up the ground, and the first furrow turned up snakes of all sizes. A large one took refuge under one of the horses, coiling around the animal's leg. The boy killed 16 snakes.

Restoring Great Dinosaur.

The great dinosaur, the restoration of which has been the work of the geological department of Yale University for more than a year, has been placed in position in the Peabody museum at Yale. It was discovered by Prof. J. B. Hatcher in the summer of 1891 while exploring for the late Prof. O. C. Marsh of Yale in Wyoming. The specimen was in excellent condition, with all its parts intact, and it was also an entirely new variety. There is but one other specimen in the world and it is in Brussels. Its length is 29 feet 3 inches. The height of the head above the base is 13 feet 2 inches.

Women Employed at Vatican.

A large staff of women is employed at the Vatican for the sole purpose of keeping the pope's wardrobe in perfect condition. No spot or stain may disfigure the garments worn by his holiness, and as he always appears in white, even a few hours' wear deprives the robes of their freshness. It is considered that no man's hand is dainty enough for their care, so in this one respect women are permitted to serve the pontiff. Only the most delicate materials are used, moire silk being the summer fabric, and a specially woven fine cloth the winter one.

An Outdoor Pulpit.

Another London church is to have the novelty of an outdoor pulpit like the one at St. Mary's Whitechapel. The new one is being erected at Christ church, Spitalfields, as a memorial to the late Dr. Billing, a former rector, and for many years bishop of Bedford. Like the open-air pulpit used at Whitechapel, the new one will look out from the church wall upon the open space of the disused churchyard, where an outdoor congregation can gather without any danger from street traffic.

An Iowa mother punishes her little son by making him wear his Sunday clothes, while she rewards her young daughter in the same manner.

Chased by Hippopotami

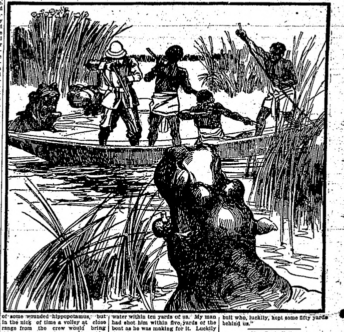
Many people in the United States know what it is to face a mob of half-crazed men, but few people have had the experience of standing off a mob of roaring hippopotami. Lionel Decle, who journeyed through the heart of Africa, from Cape Colony to Cairo, for five days fought his way down the upper Nile, opposed at every few yards by great, hulking hippopotami, who had every disposition to wreck the traveler's frail boat, but whose clumsiness, together with the unceasing vigilance of the explorers, alone prevented the catastrophe.

All the long way from Wadelai to Affudu the young explorer and his men battled with their great lumbering foes. Time and again it would seem that their boat was about to be broken into kindling wood by a furious charge of some wounded hippopotamus, but in the nick of time a volley at close range from the crew would bring the beast down or else turn him aside, and the explorer and his party would escape.

Mr. Decle, in describing this part of his experiences, says: "We had days of incessant danger from the hippos and nights of uninterrupted agony from the mosquitoes. From the moment we started in the morning until we stopped in the afternoon I had to stand ankle-deep in the water at the bottom of the boat, rifle in hand, while my trusted sergeant-major, Wana Omari, kept watch on the other side. Fifteen minutes never elapsed without our coming across troops of hippos, and these became a regular terror. The moment they saw our boat they made a dash for it. At first, seeing my men afraid, I laughed at them, telling them that the hippos were much more frightened than they, but I soon became more concerned than the men or the hippos. The hippos were so close that I wanted to take a photograph of them. Suddenly a large bull got his head clean out of the water, opened his mouth, and made for straight for us. I did not feel like taking a snapshot, but seized my eight-bore. The beast dived, and three second later was only four feet from the boat. I scarce knew what to do. If I fired and shot him, the rate at which he was going would bring him right under the boat, and just one single dying struggle would send us flying in the air. I covered him, and whether the movement frightened him or whether he thought better of it, he dived, and his head just rubbed the side of the boat.

"I had not recovered from my surprise when crack went a shot behind the men. The men rowed for dear life into a shallow place, and, turning around I saw a huge hippo struggling in the water within ten yards of us. My man had shot him within five yards of the boat as he was making for it. Luckily there was a large stretch of shallow water close to us, and we got into it. Behind us the infuriated monster, who had only been wounded, was rearing, plunging and trying to get at us. We turned the boat around, and then witnessed a wonderful sight. The hippo could not swim to us, but got in shallow water and tried to get at us. Badly wounded, he fell on his knees, rose out of the water, tried to get on the sand bank, fell back, rolling over, and ultimately forced his way toward us. Bang went my eight-bore at thirty yards, and, incredible as it may seem, the bullet struck on his back and glanced off, cutting a deep furrow in his skin. A second shot hit him, and, after a minute's terrible struggle, he rolled around and died, with one-half of his body standing out of the water.

"We had settled one beast, but all around us the river was alive with others. There were at least forty, and there might have been sixty. To get ahead we had to go among them. The river was at least four miles broad, with half a dozen channels running between submerged islands of reeds. You might have got on one of those islands, but you would never have reached the mainland. To shoot at another hippo meant only to increase our danger, as if we merely wounded him it would infuriate the beast, and if we killed him it would not drive the others away. I therefore decided to let all my men fire volleys, after which, to our great relief, the whole herd dived, and we could see them 200 yards or so higher up the stream. For days or so this sort of thing went on. We sometimes found the stream absolutely obstructed with the herds. Twice we shot some of them charging us, and once we were followed for twenty minutes by a huge bull who, luckily, kept some fifty yards behind us."



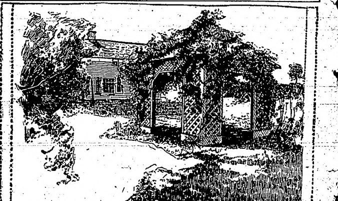
Mrs. Louis Botha.

Mrs. Louis Botha, the wife of the Boer general, who has become so prominent in her efforts to bring about peace, is of Irish extraction, being the great-grandniece of Robert Emmet. She has been one of the most beautiful women in the Transvaal, and though now the mother of a numerous family, is still a very charming and comely little woman. She is a highly-cultured woman, well read, musical, of artistic bent, and, in times of peace, a most successful and popular hostess. Mrs. Botha is on her way to visit President Kruger in Europe.

Big Drop in Meissoniers.

A big drop in Meissoniers is reported from Paris. At the Hotel Drouot lately thirty pictures and sketches brought only $8,800. Among them were "The Guide," sold soon after the artist's death for $11,600, which went for $3,400, and "The Hussar" sold for $700 instead of the $1,700 it cost.

A Children's Summer House



A summer house is more than a delight if there is room for it. It need not be a costly affair. Little folks get even more good out of a rough lath construction, thickly overrun with vines and floored with nothing more costly than clean earth. The baby can sprawl there upon his blanket through the hottest summer days, or the toddlers play games. Build it low and broad, with doors upon four sides and in either square, round or octagon shape. Grape arbors yield as much profit as pleasure, if one is at the pains so to prune the vines as not to waste all their strength in maintaining unfruitful wood. Fruit buds, it should not be forgotten, come out of new wood—that is to say, wood of last year's growth. The nearer the roots these new growths come out, the more richly fruitful they will prove. A vigorous shoot will often grow fifteen to twenty feet long. Thus cutting away the old vine need not mean spoiling the precious shade.

His Occupation Gone.

The New Bicycle.

Bicycle manufacturers state that the bicycle for this year will be practically the same model as 1900, as improvement seems to be impossible. Precisely the same is true of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It represents the limits of science, and it is impossible to make a better medicine for the stomach, liver, kidneys and blood. Try it for dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, flatulency, or sour stomach, and you will be convinced. Never take a substitute.

Expressive.

Mrs. Gowanus—What is your father doing, Herbert?

Little Herbert—He wants to find some fact or other; and he is playing hide and seek with the volumes of the Encyclopedia Britannica.—Brooklyn Eagle.

His Sister in Danger.

Little Everett was watching his mother dress his baby sister. Presently, while she was fastening the dainty slip, she said:

"Do you know, Everett, that you used to wear this when you were a little baby?"

"Did I?" he asked. "Why didn't I wear pants and a coat then, as I do now?"

"Oh, you were too small. All your clothes were just like little sister's."

He sat, thoughtfully, for a few moments, and then took a walk around the room. When he returned to where his mother and the baby were, there was a troubled look on his face.

"Did I wear all those little underskirts baby sister has on?" he inquired.

"Not the same ones, but others just like them."

"Then," he demanded, in an outburst of alarm, "is she going to turn into a boy as soon as she gets a little older, too?"

Ambrose McKay's Case.

Rockbridge, Mo., June 24th.—The neighborhood, and particularly the members of Rockbridge Lodge, No. 435, A. F. & A. M., are feeling very much pleased over the recovery of Mr. Ambrose McKay, a prominent citizen and an honored member of the Masonic Fraternity.

Mr. McKay had been suffering for years with diabetes and Rheumatism, which recently threatened to end his days. His limbs were so filled with pain that he could not sleep. He was very bad.

Just then someone suggested a new remedy—Dodd's Kidney Pills—which have been much advertised recently, as a cure for Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy, Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble.

After Mr. McKay had used a few boxes he commenced to improve. His pain all left him, and he is almost as well as ever. He says Dodd's Kidney Pills are worth much more than they cost. They are certainly getting a great reputation in Missouri, and many very startling cures are being reported.

BRITISH PEERAGES

Queer Foundations for Social Distinction

Lotteries, love stories and politics have founded more British peerages than ancient descent and deeds of arms. In the sixteenth century London Bridge was covered with shops, and the most prosperous shopkeeper on the bridge was William Hewit, a worthy linen draper, who had accumulated a fortune, and from his prominence in his guild looked forward to changing his yardstick for a knight's sword and getting a titled husband for his only daughter, Anna, who was his heiress. In the shop of William Hewit was an apprentice, Edward Osborne, who naturally fell desperately in love with his master's daughter, the fair Anna. Old Hewit's family lived over the shop, and the apprentice boarded with them, sleeping under the counter in the store at night, as all apprentices do in story books. In fact, young Osborne was a real story-book apprentice from beginning to end. One day Anna, the heiress, who probably was leaning too far out of the window to catch a glimpse of the gallants passing in their barges down the river, lost her balance and fell into the water. In after her jumped Edward Osborne and brought her safe to the stairs. After that, of course, they were married in spite of the old merchant's opposition. The son-in-law was taken into partnership, and the business flourished more than ever. Hewit became a knight and then died, leaving all his wealth to his daughter and her husband. The old shop on the bridge was abandoned, and Edward Osborne, discovering that his family, or at least a family of the same name, had been known in Kent as far back as the days of Henry VI., set up a coat-of-arms and became a man of affairs and a politician. He was elected lord mayor of London and received the honor of knighthood from Queen Elizabeth. Edward the apprentice now became Sir Edward Osborne and was a weighty citizen of London in those days. He increased his store and picked out good alliances for his children, so that his grandson married into the nobility and his great-grandson became lord high treasurer of England in the reign of the Merry Monarch. Charles II. showered honors upon his treasurer, and Thomas Osborne, the great-grandson of the apprentice who had made a fortunate rescue of his master's daughter, became Duke of Leeds, a title which his descendants hold today. One of the apprentice's descendants, the seventh Duke of Leeds, married Miss Caton of Maryland, a granddaughter of Charles Carroll of Carrollton. In the Scots Guards is an officer, Luke White. This officer is Baron Annaly of the United Kingdom. A century or so ago there was another Luke White, who kept a lottery office and dealt in second-hand books in Dublin. One day, so the story runs, this Luke White was looking through a second-hand book when he came across a lottery ticket with which he was wise enough not to part. As luck would have it, the ticket won a valuable prize, which at once placed the winner in a position of affluence. Three of his sons became colonels in the army and members of parliament, and the youngest of them married the daughter of William Dempster of Skibo castle, Andrew Carnegie's Scottish home, and became Baron Annaly. His descendant is the present baron, the Luke White of the Scots Guards. The Earl of Harrowby is a nobleman of standing in England; as proud of his lineage as any of them, as he has a right to be, for it is an honorable one, though sprung from small beginnings. More than two centuries ago a Smithfield hosier named Ryder had a clever son whom he was anxious to put into the church, while the boy was resolute to be a lawyer. So obstinately was the point contested between father and son that it began to seem probable that the boy would have to become a hosier like his father in default of a solution. Fortunately the matter was submitted for final decision to an old friend of the family, who plumped in favor of the law; and thus the boy was started on a career which led to the highest seat on the bench and to the foundation of the fortunes of the Ryders, Earls of Harrowby.

Possibilities of Wytopitlock.

If there is one Indian name among the thousands in use in Maine which has been misspelled more than another it is that by which Wytopitlock is called. The name has been cut in pieces, hacked, drawn and quartered, and although it is spelled exactly as it is pronounced the name has come to be a terror for people not proficient in Indian lore.

The postmaster has been interested to notice the different ways of spelling, and although the amount of mail received here is not great he has already made a formidable collection. Here are a few choice ones from the lot:

Whitplock, Winter Pitlock, Widow Padlock, Witter Petlock, Witter Pelog, Whytlock, Wytlock, Witter Pictlock, Wylapittock, Wypticlock, Witeopitolock, Paytolock, Pwytopetlock, Anytopetlock, Flytoplock, Wytopilis, Wyte Padlock, White Oak Padlock, Wytopotrelock, Witipidlock, Westapitlock, Whetlock, Wytopillock, Mitaplock, Wadopitlocs, Peadlock, Weetopedlocck.—New York Sun.

GOVERNS THE PRICE OF FURS

Fashion Regulates the Selling Price of the Different Varieties

The price of fur is governed to a great extent by fashion. Many years ago beaver was in demand; then mink; now it is marten. Mink is also becoming a favorite once more. Skunk is used largely, being dyed and sold under the name of some more fashionable brother, such as sable. Beaver is a very heavy-skinned animal; also the fur is thick and of great weight, which militates against its use. This fur is used to a great extent in making the finer quality of hats. The yield of beaver skins has fallen off greatly, the decrease being a fair illustration of how the fur animal is passing. In 1875-76 the return of beaver pelts from Northern Canada was 47,000. Last year there were about 6,000 skins brought in. Marten is light, beautiful and warm, therefore there is much sense in its vogue. Mink is probably the most beautiful of all fur outside of that of the four royal animals—sea-otter, black fox, sable and seal. A sea-otter has been known to bring nearly two thousand dollars, and a single black fox has sold for half as much. A choice dark marten would bring from $15 to $20; but the general price is from $6 to $10. Otter is worth from $8 to $12; fisher about the same; beaver, $6; mink, $2 to $4; and skunk, $1 to $2. Lynx are caught in great numbers in the north, and the skin makes fair lining for cloaks. Considering the size it is very cheap—from $2 to $3. Bear, musk-ox, wolf and badger have taken the place of the almost extinct buffalo as robes. The musk-ox skin, worth about $25 in its raw state, is a beautiful, heavily-furred, long-haired pelt, but is easily destroyed and almost impossible to keep clear of moths.

Bear is strong and durable, a good prime skin being worth from $15 to $30 dollars. Wolf and badger make beautiful robes, and are cheap.—Philadelphia Post.

A Sleepy Compliment.

Mr. Irving Bacheller, the author of Eben Holdem, tells with relish of an intended compliment he received about his book. He knows it was intended to be kind, but says he has an inward misgiving that it was just. Eben Holden had appeared and the public were beginning to read it. Mr. Bacheller, like any author, was eager to know what the public, not the critics, thought of his book. But, as he said, unbiased opinion is hard to get. He went to a dinner party one night, and a very nice old lady, to whom he was presented, said to him with earnestness, holding his hand: "Dear Mr. Bacheller, I am so glad to meet the author of Eben Holden. I read myself to sleep nights with your book."—Saturday Post.

Picturesque Sleeves.

The newest French sleeve models show the most approved forms of the elbow styles arranged in every sort of quaint and fanciful form, and also the shapely coat shapes with a picturesque finish at the top and about the wrists, the wrinkled Mousquetaire forms, and the graceful bell styles with dainty undersleeves of gathered mull, batiste, net, or chiffon.

"HENRY IX."

It is interesting to recall that just as the present Edward VII. chose his second baptismal name as the one by which he wished to be designated when he mounted the throne, so likewise his great-uncle, William Henry, would have preferred to be known as Henry IX., says the Literary Era. One of the reasons for this preference was the desire to establish lawful right to a title which had already been arrogated by the Cardinal of York, the last of the Stuart pretenders. When the question, however, came up for discussion by the Privy Council, the latter decided in favor of King William VII. This story was told by the King himself to Miss Helen Lloyd, the governess of his children. He added that the Privy Council was moved to this choice partly by fear of exciting superstitious fears of the populace, who still bore in their memory a prophecy dating from the seventeenth century, which runs as follows:

"Henry the Eighth pulled down monks and their cells,
Henry the Ninth shall pull down bishops and bells."

The Summer Man in All His Glory.

Take him as a whole, and the summer man promises to be a garish and gorgeous spectacle this summer. His shirts and neckwear are to be resplendent with the most striking of reds and blues, lavenders and greens, and a general jumble of all of them. With these are worn with the white ducks and flannels that fashion says will be the eminently proper things for outing suits, the effect will be picturesque, to say the least, especially as the straw hats are to be of a sort that will top all this showiness very properly. White canvas and tans are to be the colors for footwear, and, as the knickerbockers and plaid golf stockings will also be proper when one is not dressed for company, the male animal promises to be, in his own estimation at least, a thing of beauty and a fitting mate for the summer girl.

HUNDREDS KILLED

DEATH AND DESTRUCTION CAUSED BY TERRIBLE FLOODS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

WORSE THAN JOHNSTOWN HORROR

Loss of Life Will Easily Reach Two Hundred and Some Estimates Place It as High as Five or Six Hundred — Property Loss Estimated at Two Million Dollars — Communication Cut Off.

Bluefields, W. Va., June 25.—This entire section has just been visited by a flood, the extent of which in all probability will equal or exceed that of Johnstown in 1889 so far as the loss of property is concerned. Early Saturday morning a heavy downpour of rain began, accompanied by a severe electric storm which violently increased in volume and continued for several hours. This continued throughout the entire day and night, and at 10 a. m., while the storm had abated, the lowering clouds would indicate another terrific downpour at any moment. Many miles of the Norfolk & Western railroad track, bridges and telegraph lines are entirely destroyed and communication is entirely cut off west of Elkhorn, so that it is impossible to learn the full extent of the loss of life and property, but officials of the coal corporations, located in the stricken district have sent out messengers to Elkhorn, the terminus of both telegraphic and railroad communications and have received a report that a conservative estimate as to the loss of life will Easily Reach Two Hundred.

Some of the drowned are among the most prominent citizens of the coal fields. The Pocahontas coal field is located in a basin, with high mountain ranges on either side, Elkhorn creek flowing through the center of the basin, which ranges from one-fourth to one mile in width. From Ennis, W. Va., to Vivian Yard, W. Va., a distance of ten miles, miners' cabins, coal company commissaries and coke plants line the basin. Elkhorn creek, being fed by numerous small streams coming from the mountain-side, rises very rapidly, and this waterspout came so suddenly that the entire basin between the two mountain ranges was flooded before the terror-stricken people realized what was upon them, and they were carried down by the flood which swept everything in its path. The little town of Keystone, with a population of about 2,000, seems the greatest sufferer, practically the entire town being washed away. This town is the principal one in the Pocahontas coal field, and is located near its center. A great number of the coal and coke plants throughout the Pocahontas are reported and are in some instances entirely washed away. Owing to the very high water which has flooded the region and prevented communication, anything like a correct estimate of the loss of property is impossible, but the best information obtainable at 2 p. m. Sunday the loss to property will easily reach two million dollars. Between Elkhorn and Vivian Yard, a distance of ten miles, one hundred cars are said to be washed from the tracks and many of them were carried down the stream. A rough estimate places the number of bridges washed away between Bluefields and Vivian Yard, a distance of twenty-eight miles, at from fifteen to twenty, and from present indications it will be impossible to get trains through to Vivian and points west of there under a week or ten days. This will render it impossible to get relief into the stricken district, and with those who escaped with their lives, homeless and without food, indescribable suffering is inevitable.

Practically Destroyed

Communication Severed.

On the Clinch Valley branch of the Norfolk & Western railroad, between this city and Norton, Va., communication is entirely severed west of Tazewell, Va. Reports come from that point of great loss of life and property throughout that entire section. The railroad and telegraph companies are working between 1,000 and 1,500 men day and night. Officials are on the ground pushing the work of constructing telegraph lines and are building the road and hope to be able to communicate with both the storm-swept districts by noon Monday. Nothing whatever has been heard from the section of country between Vivian and Williamson other than that the Tug river is reported as being entirely over its banks and higher than ever known by the oldest inhabitants. The town of Welch, county seat of McDowell county, necessarily must have suffered seriously and a number of the large lumber plants situated along the banks of Tug river no doubt are entirely washed away.

MAY REACH SIX HUNDRED.

Loss of Life Is Appalling — Rivals Johnstown and Galveston.

Roanoka, Va., June 25.—There was a great deal of excitement and anxiety created here yesterday when it was reported that an awful flood and cloudburst had swept over the Elkhorn coal region in West Virginia. This territory is near the Virginia line and is about 125 miles west of here and some twenty-five miles west of Bluefields, W. Va. The region visited by the flood is said to be devastated and the Pocahontas coal fields are reported in ruins. More than thirty miles of the railroad tracks of the Norfolk & Western railroad is gone and reports are still coming into the general offices of this system in this city, reporting washouts on the various sections of lines in the flooded districts. One of the breaks in the track will require at least a thousand laborers and several days work to repair it. The railroad yards at Vivian, a small town in West Virginia, were completely destroyed, and it is reported most of the town was washed away. North Fork Junction and a few other smaller towns suffered greatly. It is stated that the greatest damage so far as known is at Keystone, W. Va.

From the meager reports describing the force of the storm at Keystone it would appear that the damage rivals that of Johnstown, and is equal to the Galveston horror in its intensity so far as the percentage of population lost and property destroyed. There is no telegraphic communication west of Bluefields as the telegraph lines were swept away along with the railroad tracks. It is estimated that 200 lives alone, were lost at Keystone. Railroad ties and tracks, small buildings of all descriptions, trees, telegraph poles, huge bowlders and every imaginable movable thing that came within the sweep of this mighty torrent of maddened waters, went down the mountainous district in a seething, roaring mass of debris. Dead bodies could be seen floating along the valley by those who had gained a place of safety on the high hills. The total loss of life will probably reach 500 or 600, and possibly this number will be swelled when fuller details are obtainable.

OTHER STORMS.

Terror and Havoc Created in Other Places.

Pittsburg, June 25.—The storm which broke over Allegheny county on Saturday afternoon carried with it deaths by drowning and deaths by electric shock to the number of four, floods that caused much damage and wind that created terror and havoc. Every part of the county suffered. The storm broke about 2:30 o'clock after darkness had gradually been settling down for half an hour. The day until then had been a beautiful one. The rain was very heavy, the wind strong, and often the lightning seemed to be playing right overhead.

-o-

Columbus, Ohio, June 25. — There were severe storms in many sections of Ohio Saturday and Saturday night, and considerable damage was done to property and crops. No fatalities have been reported but a number of people were injured. A veritable tornado swept Concord township, Delaware county, destroying a number of buildings.

STRUCK BY TORNADO.

Houses and Barns Blown Down and Many Horses Killed.

Pomeroy, Ohio, June 25.—A tornado struck the residence portion of Middleport yesterday morning. Two houses and six barns were blown down, about twenty buildings unroofed and 500 trees uprooted. All the telephone, electric light and telegraph wires were torn down across the trolly wires of street cars. Horses were killed by contact with the wires and one man was fatally burned. Thousands of dollars damage was done to bridges.

NEARLY A LYNCHING.

Philadelphia Crowd Would Kill a Negro Murderer.

Philadelphia, June 25.—Hugh O'Donnell, a white man aged thirty-eight years, was stabbed to death by Thomas Brockson, colored, aged twenty-nine. The crime was committed on the Walnut street bridge over the Schuylkill river and the murderer has a narrow escape from being lynched. A crowd of nearly 1,000 persons pursued the negro and were only prevented from carrying out their purpose by the arrival of eighteen policemen. O'Connell and Brockson were employed in a cement manufacturing plant and quarreled over a trifling matter.

RENEWS OFFER.

Wanamaker Again Offers to Buy Philadelphia Street Railway.

Philadelphia, June 25.—John Wanamaker has sent a letter to Robert Foerderer, renewing his offer of $2,500,000 for the rapid transit franchise to the city and an additional $500,000 for the men holding the franchise as a bonus. He also agrees to guarantee a 3-cent fare certain hours of the day and agrees to return the franchise, etc., to the city any time within ten years provided the city pays back the actual money invested and expended. The letter was delivered to Mr. Foerderer at his home. He made no reply.

KILLED BY RUFFIANS.

Young Man Stabbed While Defending Himself in an Unequal Combat.

Kansas City, June 25. — Thomas Scruggs, aged eighteen years, son of M. D. Scruggs, a well known live stock dealer, was killed last night at Troost Park in this city while trying to withstand the unprovoked attack of ten or fifteen young ruffians. Scruggs and his companions were seated on a bench when they were approached by their assailants who immediately started an altercation which was followed by a fight. During the unequal struggle Scruggs was stabbed in the right side and died from the effects of the wound. Two suspects have been arrested.

AIMED AT RELIGIOUS ORDERS.

Associations Bill Passed by the French Senate.

Paris, June 25.—The senate held three sittings on Saturday and finally the associations bill passed at 1 o'clock on Sunday morning by a vote of 173 to 99. The associations bill, or the law of associations, is aimed at the religious orders and is intended to give the government control of their operations. The immediate cause of its introduction was the use of money by the Assumptionist Fathers for political purposes. It has already been passed by the chamber of deputies.

MAD MULLAH NARROWLY ESCAPES.

He Encounters the Main British Force and Is Routed.

Aden, June 25.—The Mad Mullah, after the recent repulse by Capt. MacNeill of his attack on the British Zereba, accidentally encountered the main British force of cavalry and mounted infantry, which immediately attacked and routed him. The pursuit was continued throughout the night. A hundred of the enemy were killed and the mullah and the sultan of Nur narrowly escaped capture. The British force lost seven killed and wounded.

BRITISH DEFEAT.

Twenty Men Killed and Sixty-Six Captured.

In addition, sixty-six of the Cape (Colonial) Mounted Rifles were captured. Capt. Spandon is reported to have been wounded and one Boer was killed.

DOWAGER IS BOSS

ANNIVERSARY OF SIEGE FINDS HER RULING CHINA AS OF YORE.

OLD-TIME FAVORITES RESTORED

Events of the Year Still Leave the Dowager Empress With a Firm Grasp on the Throne—Exciting Incidents Almost Forgotten—Commercial Schemes Now Given Preeminence.

Pekin, June 22.—Yesterday was the anniversary of the beginning of the siege of the legations at Pekin. The events that have happened during that time still leave the dowager empress with firm grasp on her power; her former generalissimo, Jung Lu, is in favor at the court; Gen. Tung Fu Hsiang, who commanded the Chinese troops and ordered them to attack the foreigners is scot free; Prince Tuan, the chief criminal in the Boxer uprising, has received comparatively light punishment and his son is still the heir apparent to the throne. The perils of last year, the plotting of the court, the dastardly outrages, the edicts ordering the Extermination of Foreigners

and the pandemonium caused by the Boxer uprising have been largely forgotten. The savage attacks on the various missions and the massacres of innocent missionaries are ignored, while commercial schemes are given pre-eminence. The Chinese officials are afraid that when the Chinese regulars arrive here before the foreign troops withdraw from the various sections of the city there will be collisions and troubles between the home and foreign soldiers. The people are anxious about the future as they see no plan as yet by which the Chinese propose to control the bands of ruffians who are ready to rob and plunder when foreign guards are withdrawn before the Chinese are reinstated in control.

RACE WAR IS ON.

Oklahoma Town Will Not Permit Negroes to Visit or Live There.

Guthrie, Okla., June 22. — Deputy United States Marshal Sisson was called to Glencoe, on the Eastern Oklahoma railroad, yesterday afternoon by a race difficulty at that place. The United States marshals were notified by the Santa Fe authorities that the citizens of Glencoe had threatened to use force to run out a gang of forty colored men employed to raise grade at that point. The citizens of Glencoe have a rule that allows no colored man to visit or live in that village.

PASSENGERS BADLY HURT.

Flyer Is Ditched by the Breaking of an Axle.

Greenville, Pa., June 22. — By the ditching of the Erie & Pittsburg flyer at Transfer last evening four passengers were badly hurt, but none of them seriously. Just after leaving the station the rear axle of the tender broke, throwing the tender, baggage car, express car and vestibuled coaches from the track and turning them over. It was at first thought many were killed, but it was soon learned that the four named were the only victims.

DIVERTING A RIVER.

Proposal to Construct a Tunnel Through a Mountain Range.

Washington, June 22.—Acting under the general directions of Chief Hydrographer Newell, geological survey parties have just begun work in the Gunison river valley, in Western Colorado, near Montrose, which looks to diverting the river by means of a great tunnel through a mountain range into a dry and fertile valley. Another party has begun the preliminary work of diverting St. Mary's river into the Milk river valley in Montana.

BOTH DUELLISTS DEAD.

Fought as the Outcome of a Family Feud.

Waynesboro, Miss., June 22.—A. M. Leary and J. L. Davis engaged in a duel yesterday in which both were instantly killed. The trouble arose as a result of a family feud. Davis, who owned a big licensed distillery, opened fire on Leary with a pistol. He fired three times. After Leary was down he fired a shot with a pistol, killing Davis.

ATTACK OF GOUT.

Mr. Chamberlain's Knee Laid Up for Repairs.

London, June 22.—In a letter to the secretary of the Midland Conservative association excusing his non-appearance at a luncheon to be given in his honor, Joseph Chamberlain writes that his doctors will not allow him to move. A slight attack of the gout in the tendons of the knee renders it impossible for him to stand or sit upright.

LIGHTNING'S VICTIMS.

Three Killed and Several Injured in Indiana.

Indianapolis, June 22.—Three persons were killed and several injured by lightning during the severe electrical storm which passed over Indiana on Wednesday night. The storm took on cyclonic aspects at several places.

Big Loss By Fire.

Duluth, Minn., June 22.—Fire at the sawmill of the Tower Lumber company near Bear Lake, in the northern part of the county, destroyed about $150,000 worth of lumber yesterday. The bulk of it belonged to Poepke, Leicht & Co. of Chicago. Details regarding its origin or the insurance are not yet obtainable.

Killed by a Car.

El Paso, Tex., June 22.—Harry von Ginkel, until recently the principal owner of the street car service here, was struck by a car and fatally injured. He died at midnight. He formerly lived in Des Moines, Iowa.

Killed the Engineer.

Kansas City, June 22.—A locomotive hauling a Chicago & Alton freight exploded while running slowly near Independence. Engineer George Gerew was killed and Fireman Louis Crowly probably fatally hurt.

DAMAGE BY TORNADO.

Occupants of a House Have Narrow Escape.

Rapid City, S. D., June 22.—A tornado did heavy damage several miles west of this city yesterday, completely demolishing a house on the Little Ranch occupied by F. N. Allen and family. The occupants reached a cellar in time to escape death. Trees were torn up and carried many yards. The storm overtook the mail carrier and a lady passenger coming from Silver City. The buggy was demolished and the two had a miraculous escape. The horses have not yet been found. This city was visited by a heavy storm and several hundred dollars' worth of damage was done to window glass.

IN A DEMENTED CONDITION.

Miss Helen Fifield Thought to Be Wandering About in Chicago.

Chicago, June 22.—Mystery still surrounds the disappearance of Miss Helen Fifield, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Ald. and Mrs. Frank Fifield of Janesville, Wis. However, clues have been obtained that lead the police to believe that the girl is wandering about Chicago in a demented condition. She is known to have boarded a train bound for South Chicago Thursday morning, but the fact that she was only partially dressed leads her friends to believe that she was not responsible for her actions.

BATTLE OF ARMS AT FORT.

Eighth Infantry Pursues Two Escaped Prisoners.

St. Paul, June 23.—The escape of two military prisoners at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon at Fort Snelling caused a general "call to arms." The whole garrison took part in the exciting chase and the prisoners might have escaped but for accident. Private Welmer got lost in the woods of the Minnesota river bottoms, and in trying to locate himself, he saw the two fugitives up a tree. He took aim at them with his rifle, but they begged him not to shoot. They were marched back to the fort.

TO JOIN HIS REGIMENT.

Capt. Mercer to Be Relieved as Indian Agent.

Washington, June 23.—There are indications that Capt. W. A. Mercer will soon be relieved from his position as Indian agent at Leech Lake, and that he will join his regiment. While it is probable that the change will not be made until after Capt. Mercer completes his report on the logging operations of the past winter on the Chippewa reservations. It appears from the gossip around the war and interior departments that the captain is soon to have his wish in the matter of being allowed to rejoin his regiment.

GOPHERS IN FORCE

PARTICIPATE IN THE DEDICATION EXERCISES AT BUFFALO EXPOSITION.

MANY MINNESOTANS ARE PRESENT

State Building Dedicated With Appropriate Ceremonies — Gov. Van Sant Escorted by the Second Battalion of the First Minnesota Regiment — Many Editors in Attendance—H. P. Hall Also Present.

Buffalo, June 20. — Yesterday was Minnesota day and the Minnesota State building at the Pan-American grounds was dedicated. Gov. Van Sant, with his staff, the Second battalion of the First Minnesota regiment, many members of the Minnesota Editorial association, with their families, and many citizens of that state were present. A light rain was falling, but this did not prevent the crowding of the Temple of Music, where the dedicatory exercises were held.

Previous to the Dedication the governor and his staff, the Minnesota commissioners and the Minnesota Editorial association met at the Minnesota building and marched under escort of the Minnesota guardsmen and the Sixty-fifth New York band to the Temple of Music. Gophers flocked from all over the grounds and in a few minutes the building was almost filled, at least 4,000 people witnessing the exercises.

The audience rose while the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner." W. J. Munro, president of the Minnesota Editorial association, called to order and Rev. A. B. Meldrum of St. Paul offered prayer.

W. I. Buchanan, director general of the exposition, welcomed the Minnesota people to Buffalo and to the exposition, declaring it a proud moment in the history of the state. Alex McDougall, president of the Minnesota board of managers, made the formal presentation of the building. Gov. Van Sant made an appropriate response. Mayor Diehl of Buffalo was a little late, but he extended the freedom of the city and congratulated the state on the showing made by its building, its visitors and its troops.

H. P. Hall set the audience going with his dry humor. He declared the present occasion the tide which, taken at its flood, leads on to fortune. He declared the Pan-American exposition the greatest ever given by any city or state. He congratulated Buffalo on the exposition and on its opportunity of meeting the Minnesota people.

Senator Clapp and Congressman Stevens also delivered addresses.

After the exercises Gov. Van Sant and the other Minnesotans kept open house and received hundreds of visitors at their state building.

ROASTED BY THE JUDGE.

Managers of a Mining Company Scored From the Bench.

Minneapolis, June 21.—Judge Pond of the Minneapolis district court yesterday afternoon appointed A. H. Hall receiver for the American Mining Investment company. Application was made for a receiver for the National Promotion company, an affiliated organization, but the attorneys for the company objected on the ground that as the court had appointed an unfriendly person receiver of the other company they would fight the appointment of a second receiver. Arguments will be heard later. The order filed by Judge Pond contains a scathing arraignment of Charles R. Tuttle and L. Hancock, the two men alleged to have been active in the management of the company. The information upon which the order is based, the court says, charges "the rankest and most glaring misrepresentation and fraud and in effect a course of business conduct so steeped in iniquity and sin as to stagger human belief."

SUPERIOR WILDLY AGITATED.

Mayor of the City Arrested for Criminal Libel.

West Superior, June 21.—This city is agitated over the arrest of the mayor, F. S. Parker, on a charge of criminal libel preferred by Ald. J. W. Barry, a member of the city council and a saloonkeeper. The mayor and several members of the city council, representing the opposing political factions, have been at varience for some time. About two weeks ago they succeeded in passing a resolution through the council requiring the mayor to give a list of all the gambling and disorderly houses in the city. Tuesday night he answered the resolution, refusing to comply with it on the ground that Ald. Barry, the introducer, had not presented it in good faith, but was incensed because the mayor had closed a disreputable resort near his saloon. Mayor Parker charged Barry with deriving business from the house and said that he introduced the resolution the night after he had refused to allow it to reopen, simply as a retaliatory measure.

RUINED BY TROUSERS.

Last Remnant of the Cocopah Indian Tribe of Colorado Has Gone to Mexico.

Reduced by disease and famine to the mere remnant of a tribe, twoscore Cocopah Indians, with their squaws and 50 puny, suffering children, crossed the Mexican side of the international line below Yuma, a short time ago. With no land to call their own, the little band had practically been driven from the civilization that had ruined them.

Less is known of the Cocopahs than of any other tribe in North America. In 1689 Father Rodriguez visited them and described the men as being of extraordinary size. They have always persisted in keeping to themselves. For a long time their tribe has been growing smaller and their physical proportions have been diminishing.

The Cocopahs attribute their retrogression to the assumption of clothing. Before they learned the ways of the white man, and donned trousers and shirts, they knew no illness. Since then disease has ravaged the tribe. Last winter many of them died of pneumonia and two months ago smallpox broke out among them. Scores of the Indians have died of the disease.

For weeks an armed guard kept the Cocopahs away from Yuma, their sole source of supplies. As a result the Indians suffered from lack of food and other supplies, while they had no medicine except their own concoctions.

An extraordinary ceremony was performed in Cape Town a few weeks ago. A lion tamer had been giving an exhibition for several days, and one evening he informed the audience that he had just become a father and he intended to baptise the infant on the following day in the lions' cage. Those who heard him thought he was joking, but when they reached the exhibition hall the next evening they found that he was in dead earnest.

In the cage he stood, surrounded by his assistants, and near him were seated three women—his wife, one of her friends and the godmother of the infant. To the left of them stood the clergyman, holding the baby in his arms, and behind him was a gigantic African named Leo, who was to act as godfather on the occasion. Facing this fearless group were two huge lions, whose every action showed that they were immeasurably surprised at the intrusion of so many strangers into their domicile. Moreover, their surprise was the greater since, in honor of the event, their cage was wreathed with flowers and splendidly illuminated with electric lights.

The ceremony was duly performed, and while it lasted the lions behaved with "perfect propriety," much to the satisfaction and surprise of the immense crowd which thronged the hall.

The Russian empire is possibly the greatest contributor to the world's supply of fur. Russian and Siberian hunters destroy annually 3,000,000 ermines, 16,000,000 marmots and 25,000,000 squirrels.

Among the features of Japan's military system is the fact that on the army pay rolls are 2,000 tailors, 1,000 shoemakers, 10,000 grooms, and 1,500 attendants, says the Washington Times. The medical staff is one of the most complete in either Europe or Asia. All officers holding only temporary commissioned rank are included in the list of petty officers.

Investments in horse-flesh are proverbially uncertain, but a city board of health found an ample return for the fifteen dollars expended in the purchase of a horse. The animal was used in producing antitoxin, and yielded many thousand vials, valued at thousands of dollars. Having done his work and been turned out to grass, he now enjoys a well-deserved rest.

It is said that the Bank of France has an invisible studio in a gallery behind the cashiers, so that at a given signal from one of them any suspected customer can instantly have his photograph taken without his knowledge. The camera has also become very useful in the detection of frauds, a word or figure that to the eye seemed completely erased being clearly reproduced in photographs of the document that had been tampered with.

Daughters of the Confederacy throughout the country are interested in a movement which has been started to buy the old home of Gen. Stonewall Jackson at Lexington, Va. The matter has been under consideration by a local chapter of the daughters at Lexington, and Mrs. Jackson. She wishes to dispose of the property as she cannot afford to keep it, and the daughters are considering the advisability of buying it and turning it to hospital purposes.

T. J. J. See of the Naval Observatory has announced the results of new measurements of Saturn and its rings, which differ somewhat from older determinations. He makes the exterior diameter of the rings about 173,226 miles, the equatorial diameter of Saturn 74,990 miles, and the polar diameter 67,395, the difference between the two diameters being 7,595, miles almost equal to the entire diameter of the earth. Mr. See's measures make the diameter of Titan, the largest of Saturn's moons, 2,092 miles. It had previously been estimated as high as 3,600 miles.

At a recent woman's meeting where parliamentary points were getting tangled and feelings embittered, Mrs. William Tod Helmuth begged that the ladies heed the rules of the Pilgrims: "Touch no state matters; pick no quarrels; reveal no secrets; maintain no ill opinions; make no comparisons; lay no wagers." These maxims have since been known in that circle as "Fanny's recipe for club elections." Oddly enough, King Edward recently discovered an old black letter manuscript bearing the same rules, which he has caused to be framed and posted in Windsor Castle. They may be recommended to persons who are not habitues of clubs or castles.

The summer camp for schoolboys is a recognized institution in certain parts of the country. All its advantages may be seen in a new application of the camp idea which has just been made by members of the Intercollegiate Young Men's Christian Association. In this second summer of their enterprise sixty boys preparing for college are to gather at a spot on the New England coast where the best facilities for all land and water sports abound. Besides the boys there will be fifteen "leaders," young men still in college or just out of it, who have been identified with the more serious aspects of college life, as well as with athletics. Indeed, a fair proportion of them can wear a "varsity" initial on their sweaters.

According to scientific investigations, directed from Washington, which have been going on for several months, there are about 275 reported cases of leprosy in the United States. It is thought probable that the real number may be nearer 1,000. For various reasons physicians who have cases of this disease, in many instances either fail or refuse to report them. But the number reported is sufficiently large to occasion some alarm. Seventy-four of the known cases are in New Orleans, chiefly among the Italian population. There are 23 in Minnesota, mostly among the Scandinavians in the rural settlements. There are 15 cases in North Dakota, and two in South Dakota, among the same people. Chicago has five cases and New York six.

Attention has recently been called by scientists to the disappearance of the chamois from the French Alps. These graceful animals, in spite of the fact that they conceal their homes and places of refuge in the most inaccessible spots, at heights varying from 2,600 feet to 11,500 feet, are mercilessly hunted and shot down, so that there is danger of their complete extinction. In Italy there is a large reserve on which the chamois are protected, and the formation of a similar reserve in France is advocated.

ENDS IN MARRIAGE.

Happy Culmination of Threatened Tragedy.

Medical aid restored him to health, the young lady repented of her refusal and the wedding followed.

As no one saw the shooting, it is now hinted that Grundman may have done it himself, although the location of the wounds hardly permits this theory. and has not been seen since. The modus operandi was to have checks printed on some leading lumber companies, fill them out for amounts ranging from $10 to $20, forging the signatures of the secretary and other parties known to have authority to sign the same.

The most successful worked were of the Rust-Owen Lumber company, Eau Claire, drawn on the First National Bank of Eau Claire, which bank does not exist, signing F. H. Drummand, secretary. He would alight from trains, represent himself as a lumber jack and generally carry his hand in a sling, make purchases, pass a check, get the balance in cash. At Hayward eight checks were realized on, the sheriff of Sawyer county being one of the victims. The officers are still in pursuit.

TRAGEDY AT WINONA.

Family Quarrel Results in a Double Shooting.

Winona, Minn., June 28. — A double shooting took place here last evening. Joe Campbell shot and probably fatally wounded his father-in-law, William Grundman, and then shot himself in the head. Grundman was shot through the body and is failing rapidly. It is not believed that he can live. The trouble is of long standing. Grundman and his son-in-law have never gotten along well. Campbell married the daughter several years ago and had two children, a girl about twelve years of age and a boy about six. The old man has been compelled to support the family the greater part of the time. In Campbell's attempt at suicide he shot his right eye to pieces and the left eye is seriously injured, but it is thought the bullet did not penetrate the brain. While his condition is serious he may recover.

KILLED BY WOLVES.

Wisconsin Hunter's Tragic Death in the Woods.

Weyauwega, Wis., June 28. — John Hochstock of Mellen went hunting June 16 and failed to return. Parties were organized and after a prolonged search one of them came upon the scene of a terrific struggle. Scattered around a large open space in the woods they found the carcasses of seven wolves. The only trace found of Hochstock was a few bones, the torn shreds of clothing, which were identified as his, a watch which belonged to him, and $65 in a pocket in his trousers. The sod was torn up, and deep footprints of the man's boots were all about, showing that he had met the onslaught of the savage beasts with phenomenal strength and the fortitude of a man who sees death staring him in the face.

FORCED TO LEAVE THE TOWN.

A band of regulators ordered her to go. She requested that she be allowed to remain until her three-year-old child should grow up. She said she had no means and no place to go to. The regulators said they would provide her transportation to any place outside the county within a reasonable distance. She accepted their terms.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm — A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

The Modern Dairyman.

In an address given before the State Dairymen's Association at New Haven, Governor Hoard dealt with the modern aspects of dairying as compared with those which had governed the industry in bygone days. In the course of his remarks, he said:

The last third of a century marks an epoch in the progress of the dairy industry to a certain extent in all parts of the world. There is something peculiar about this industry in its effect on the men who follow it intelligently. They stand foremost in the ranks of agriculture in the point of intellectual conquest. Dairying calls for the best judgment and work in the tillage of the soil and the growing of grass and grain. It calls for special knowledge in the care and harvesting of those crops, in order that they may impart their highest food value.

It calls for a special study in the principles and art of animal feeding, so that the cow may be given a ration fitted to the functional work she has in hand and our highest profit. It calls for a special judgment in the matter of constructing barns, stables, silos, yards, and drinking places, for we are dealing with a high order of animal life. Herein is valuable also a knowledge of farm sanitation—what its principles, limitations, and results are. We are responsible for the crowding together of large numbers of cows, and we must hold ourselves responsible to them, and the public whose food they yield, for as perfect and healthful a mode of life as it is possible for us to provide for them. It calls for a knowledge of the laws of reproduction, whereby we may make use of the forces of nature to the manifest increase of dairy power in our cattle. We have no right to sit still or act indifferently on this question. The cows of a state are what its dairy farmers have made.

No other branch of agriculture is as socialistic as dairying, for it is organized very greatly all over the land into cheese factories and creameries. Here, again, is a special endowment of sound sense required. The moment such organization takes place, the farmer finds himself no longer a producer, but a manufacturer. He must learn how to co-operate with his fellow farmers, according to the laws of business. He must study the finer economics of manufacturing. He is to be the creator of one of the finest foods on earth, which, like Caesar's wife, "must be above suspicion."

Live Stock Diseases in England.

A report from Professor McFadyean presented to the council of the Royal Agricultural Society at their last meeting stated that during the sixteen weeks of this year for which the official returns have been issued, 221 outbreaks of anthrax, with 327 animals attacked, have been notified. For the corresponding period of last year the figures were 179 and 283 respectively. During the same period there have been 377 outbreaks of glanders, with 644 animals attacked, as against 337 outbreaks and 609 animals attacked during the first sixteen weeks of last year. Since the last meeting of the council three fresh centers of foot and mouth disease have been detected. The first of these was reported from Suffolk on April 7, and the other two from Essex on April 8 and 12 respectively. The total number of outbreaks for the present year is 12, with 665 animals attacked. During the first sixteen weeks of the year there have been 935 outbreaks of swine fever, as against 563 for the corresponding period of last year. Serious as these figures are, they scarcely disclose the full extent to which the disease has recently increased. The outbreaks for the last four weeks number 406, as against 163 for the corresponding four weeks of last year. Unfortunately a case of rabies was reported during the week ending April 20. It occurred in Carmarthenshire, and, in addition to the diseased animal, two dogs have been destroyed as having been exposed to infection. During the month of April, 39 morbid specimens were forwarded to the research laboratory at the Royal Veterinary College for examination. These included cases of anthrax, black-quarter, tuberculosis, actinomycosis, glanders, tumors, parasitic gastritis, etc. During the same period an outbreak of contagious abortion among mares and losses among ewes and lambs from worm parasites, have been locally investigated.—Farm and Home.

Poultry Briefs.

The proper feeding of birds has much to do with their health. The ration of the fowls should always be a balanced one. Fowls fed an unbalanced ration continually are certain to become weak. If it is unbalanced on the side of too much carbo-hydrates they become soft and lazy and the bones lack strength, as well as do the muscles. If the food is overbalanced on the side of too much nitrogenous matter, various troubles follow, and in such a condition the birds are said to fall easy victims to rheumatism, which in turn is made possible by too great a supply of acid formed from the nitrogenous food products. It pays a man to study the ration question if he wishes to avoid many troubles with fowls.

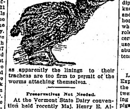
The annual death rate among fowls is altogether too large, and this is especially true of the chicks during the first year. We have observed that a very large proportion of the losses are preventable losses—losses due to lack of care and proper food. Every experienced poultryman can look back and see how freely and recklessly he sacrificed the lives of his birds in the early years of his experience. The novice has a blissful confidence that his chicks will all come to maturity. A correspondent of the Farmers' Review tells of one such experience, as follows: "I had about 200 chicks hatch. They appeared certain to all grow up into fine hens and cockerels. I fed them anything that came along, let them run with the hens and gave them barrels for shelter at night. After a little some of them began to disappear, and I set a watch to discover the agency. The culprit was not long in being found out, and proved to be a neighbor's cat, which was very expert in entangling the chicks in the tall grass and overpowering them. So we shut the chicks up in tight coops night and day. One night there came a terrific thunder shower, the rain falling so rapidly that the water soon stood several inches deep on places that we hardly before knew were at all convex. In the morning there were a number of dead chicks. After that the chicks began to stand around and peep. We wondered why they did not care for food. They began to wilt and die, and in ten days numerous chicks had ceased to be counted among the living. The dead were numbered by the score. We did not at that time find out the cause; but we now know it to have been lice. When the remainder of the chicks were half grown some big rats in the shed found out that chicken meat was good to eat and kept making raids on the new food supply till they themselves were annihilated by traps and poison. In time the 200 chicks dwindled to about forty, a loss of 80 per cent. We have learned to do far better than that now; and the losses are usually not over 20 per cent. What I have said proves to me that ignorance is the most expensive thing on the farm."

Chick with Pip.

Herewith we illustrate a chicken with the gapes—popularly called the "pip." Many a farmer sees his chicks acting as indicated in the illustration and imagines that the food is not right. The food is changed, but the trouble is not obviated. The difficulty is the presence of the gape worm, a little red worm with a V-shaped terminus. This V is formed by the juncture of the male and female worms. We give this much for identification purposes. The worms inhabit the trachea. Sometimes they can be removed by a feather and some claim to remove them with drops of turpentine. Others have failed in all the things they have tried. Without doubt prevention is the factor that should receive the most attention. When the chicks show the symptoms indicated, have all the young chicks put at once on board floors where they cannot get at the dirt. The angle worm and dirt in which the angle worm is found are the sources of contagion. After the chicks are mature they are not injured by the gapes, as apparently the linings to their tracheas are too firm to permit of the worms attaching themselves.



Preservatives Not Needed.

At the Vermont State Dairy convention held recently Maj. Henry E. Alvord, chief of the Dairy division of the department of agriculture, stated that the experiment of shipping butter to foreign markets had begot the confidence of foreign merchants, by showing them that Americans could furnish an excellent quality of butter and place it on their markets in as good condition as other countries. Partly as the result of the department's work, there was more demand for American butter and cheese abroad than our merchants could supply. He did not believe in the use of preservatives in butter. Great Britain was the best market to cultivate, and no preservative was needed to send butter there. Sweden and Denmark boasted that they could send butter there without preservatives. Even butter color was not needed for the best butter market in all England—Manchester. In order to compete successfully with Sweden, Denmark and Canada, what was needed on dairy exports was the official stamp of approval by this government, guaranteeing the purity. If butter is of excellent quality, it would sell abroad in any kind of package, but tastes and preferences should be studied. The English market holds to the old hundred-weight of 112 lb., and wants packages of 112 lb., 56 lb. and 28 lb. If a man had good clean, pure milk, he would not recommend pasteurization. It was a premium on slovenly dairying, and cooked milk was not as digestible as raw.

Ohio College Dairy.

The agricultural department of the Ohio State University owns a herd of forty cows and retails milk in the city of Columbus. The annual gross receipts from the sale of milk average sixty-five hundred dollars. All of the work of caring for the cows, milking, separating, pasteurizing, bottling, and delivering the milk to customers is done by students in the agricultural courses. In this way many worthy young men earn a part, and in some cases all, of their college expense who would, without such help be unable to secure a college education.

Labor wins in the poultry house—not luck. The poultry house is not a lottery.

Dipping Sheep for Scab.

A bulletin sent out by the Missouri State Board of Agriculture says:

By far the most rational and satisfactory, and the cheapest method of curing scab is by dipping the sheep in some liquid which will kill the parasites. The dipping process is as follows:

(1) Select a dip containing sulphur. If a prepared dip is used which does not contain sulphur, it is always safer to add about 16½ pounds of sifted flowers of sulphur to every 100 gallons of water, especially if, after dipping, the sheep have to be returned to the old pastures.

(2) Shear all the sheep at the one time, and immediately after shearing confine them to one-half the farm for two to four weeks. Many persons prefer to dip immediately after shearing.

(3) At the end of this time dip every sheep (and every goat also, if there are any on the farm).

(4) Ten days later dip the entire flock a second time.

(5) After the second dipping, place the flock on the portion of the farm from which they have been excluded during the previous four or five weeks.

(6) Use the dip at a temperature of 100 degrees to 110 degrees F.

(7) Keep each sheep in the dip for two minutes by the watch—do not guess at the time—and duck its head at least once.

(8) Be careful in dipping rams, as they are more likely to be overcome in the dip than are the ewes.

(9) Injury may, however, result to pregnant ewes, which must, on this account, be carefully handled. Some farmers arrange a stage with sides, to hold the pregnant ewes, which is lowered carefully into the vat, and raised after the proper time.

(10) In case a patent, or proprietary, dip, especially an arsenical dip, is used, the directions given on the package should be carried out to the letter. • • •

Whatever dip is selected, the farmer should not forget that there are two ways to use that dip. One way is to prepare and use it in accordance with the directions given; the other way is to attempt to economize time, labor, or money by using the dip in weaker proportion than advised, by hurrying the sheep through the swim, or by later placing the dipped sheep under unfavorable conditions. If the former method is adopted with any of the established dips, the treatment ought to be followed with favorable results; if the latter method is adopted, the farmer himself must assume the responsibility of failure, no matter which dip he decides to use. Every farmer should, therefore, remember that when he has decided upon the dip he is to use, his work has only begun; to use the dip properly is fully as important as to use a dip at all.

Sulphur is one of the oldest known remedies for scab, its use dating back to Columella in the early part of the Christian era. As a scab eradicator, it must be placed among the best substances at our disposal. It is one of the constituents of certain proprietary dips, but its use to the farmer is best known in the tobacco-and-sulphur dip and in the lime-and-sulphur dip. These home-made mixtures are the two dips which have played the most important roles in the eradication of scab from certain English colonies, and their use, especially the use as well as the abuse of lime and sulphur, is quite extensive in this country.

Barley Malt and Barley.

Lawes and Gilbert of Rothamsted Experiment Station, England, report the result of an experiment in feeding twenty milking cows, twenty fattening oxen, sixty sheep and forty-eight pigs on barley malt as compared with barley. The malt was compared with an amount of barley equal to that from which it was produced and a sample which had been taken from the same stock. The trial was conducted in a very careful manner and covered two grades of barley,—viz., good malting barley and second grade barley.

Lawes and Gilbert write: "The general conclusion from the results of the direct experiment with cows, oxen, sheep and pigs, is, that a given weight of barley is more productive, both of the milk of cows, and of the increase in live-weight of fattening animals, than the amount of malt and malt-dust that would be produced from it. • • • Irrespective of economy, malt is undoubtedly a very good food for stock; and common experience seems to show that a certain amount of it is beneficial when given in admixture, and in change with other food to young or weakly animals or in 'making up' or 'finishing' for exhibition or sale: that is when the object is to produce a particular result irrespective of the economy required in ordinary feeding."

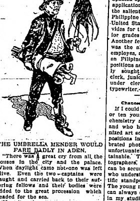
WHERE THE RAIN NEVER FALLS

Aden guards the lower entrance of the Red sea. It is built in the crater of an extinct volcano and all the land is barren. This is the country where it never rains. There is good reason for this in the eyes of Mother Nature, and reason, good or bad, according to the pilots who guide the boats among the islands of the sea. And all the natives are of the same mind, especially those who have listened to the stories of hardship and trials told them in their childhood as they swung in their grass hammocks in the shadows of their huts. Mahomet Bey, in his flowing robes of blue and his turban of green and his yellow shoes, told the story as he sat before his open door scanning the sea for a sail or the smoke of a steamer looking for a pilot:

"Once the rains fell here as they do in Port Said at the other end of the Red sea, and even as they do in Colombo and Singapore, and all the rest of the world." Mahomet Bey shook his head and sighed as he thought of times when no one had to carry water from the springs beneath the tides of the sea. "But this was in the days of long, long ago, and all we know of that time or of the things that happened then is what is told us by our elders or sung to us as we lay in our cradles. According to the legends Ras Sanailah, which same is now Aden, lay in a beautiful valley with palms waving on the hills and figs and vines trailing off as far as the eye could see. In this valley was a beautiful city, and in the center of this city stood the palace of the queen. Surrounding her were her attendants and her armies. But the soldiers had little to do, for the whole land was at peace.

"One evening when the sky was filled with a red haze, the enemy came, riding upon the sea and swarming across the land, trampling under foot this beautiful valley and finally sitting down before the gates of the city, crying for its surrender. Black were the hearts of the besiegers and dark were their deeds as they went back and forth. The queen was helpless in her palace, and after a time all the provisions were eaten. One dark night when the thunders were crashing and the floods were descending upon the earth a captain of the queen's army opened the gates just a little way that he might slip out and so escape in the storm to the hills. Another captain saw him, and he, too, tried to escape. So it was the enemy saw these two captains of the queen's army running down the highway and threw its whole strength against the gate and forced it open.



THE UMBRELLA MENDER WOULD FARE BADLY IN ADEN.

"There was a great cry from all the houses in the city and the palace. When daylight came not one was left alive. Even the two captains were caught and carried back to their suffering fellows and their bodies were added to the great procession which headed for the sea.

"Now it so happened that this queen was the daughter of a god, who at that time was on a hunt in the wilds and jungles of the desert, and so did not know of the trials his daughter, the queen, was enduring all the days of the siege. As she was mortal she had to die as the rest had died, but her father, the god, was very wroth when he learned of the fate of Ras Sanailah and hurried away across the deserts and jungles of Africa to this land. The enemy was living in all the good houses of the city as well as in the palace. In the market place before the palace a new temple to a strange god was being built.

"The father of the queen sat upon the walls of the city and thought what would be the most severe and lasting punishment that he could inflict. He knew if he should put them to death other people would come and take their places. Then he bethought him to desolate the valley and the hills and all the land. Even this would be but temporary as far as the immortals go, for Nature would again spread her green leaves and the fronds of her palms, her figs, and her grapes over the valley and the hills. So it was this god decreed that no more rain should fall in Ras Sanailah, and that all wells should run dry, and that all rocks should turn black, and the soil should become barren. So no more rain fell in this town, and all the wells became dry, and all the rocks turned black, and all the soil grew barren.

"And the strange people who had driven the queen from her throne cried with a great cry for water and for food. Their god, to whom they were building the temple in the market place, heard their cry and came to them. Over the gate of the city the father of the queen was sitting when this strange god came down the hill. The two gods met in the valley. Then they fought as mortals never fought, and the hills shot forth flames. The new god fell. And with him were destroyed his followers, and all the victorious horde was wiped from the earth. The father of the queen was grievously wounded and was carried home by his angels, and even to this day has never recalled the curse which he cast upon this land.

"For many years nothing but the memory of the departed hosts filled this valley. At last commerce came with her galleys and her ships and people again landed here and built their houses upon the rocks, broken and twisted into heaps by the feet of the warring gods. Today Aden has many inhabitants. Water is brought by ships from fairer shores. Divers go down into the sea and fill their goat skin bottles from the spring of the deep.

"But it never rains in Aden."—Harry A. Armstrong in Chicago Record-Herald.

Dreams; Life's Bow of Promise.

Youth dreams and the rich color of expectancy lends beauty to all the coming years. Man dreams and the vision strengthens his hand and makes gentle his heart. Age dreams and the spirit picture has suggestion which softens pain and holds glad promise of the life beyond the hills. The year without a dream is a barren, fruitless time. Dreams are the sowing—and sometimes the harvest. Happy, thrice happy, the man who keeps uncrippled his capacity to dream through all the blundering days, his ability to use the spiritual telescope which sees further and truer than material eyes. If one's dreams come true, well. If one's dreams come not true, still well. We are the better and the braver for the dreaming.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Filipinos Seek Appointments.

Late mail advices from Manila give interesting details concerning the recent civil service examinations held in that city. Nearly 700 English and Spanish-speaking competitors made application for examination. One of the salient differences between the Philippine civil service and that of the United States is that the former provides for the promotion from the junior grades to the highest positions. Another feature novel to the Filipinos was the allowance made for female employes, and there were about a dozen Filipino women who applied for positions as clerks. The positions chiefly sought were those of postoffice clerk, junior clerk, clerk, bookkeeper, under clerk and stenographer and typewriter.—Washington Post.

Chances for Chemical Experts.

If I could obtain the services of eight or ten young men who have studied chemistry as applied to photography, and who have attended some recognized art school, I would give them positions in my studio, writes a celebrated photographer in Success. But, unfortunately, such men are not obtainable. There are hundreds of photographers, so called, whose services can be secured at any time. But those who understand the art from a scientific standpoint are decidedly rare. The young man who will take my hint can always obtain employment, either in my studio or in those of my colleagues.

Unfortunate Creature.

"In these days," he said, "individual effort goes for nothing. It is useless for a man to start out alone. He must——"

"Oh, Cuthbert," she cried, "how mean of you to bring me away out here in this boat and then, knowing I could not escape, say such things to me. But—but if you insist, I will ask papa when we get back."

Self-Esteem at Different Ages.

Said W. W. Goodwin, a retiring Harvard professor, at a dinner in his honor the other evening: "When I was 20 I thought I was 40, when I was 30 I thought I was 50, when I was 40 thought I was 25, and when I was 50 I wondered if they were going to bring in the high chair at the table and give me a bottle."

As the result of the military and naval maneuvers for testing the possibility of a successful attack on Marseilles, France, it has been decided to construct further fortified works around the city.

LITERARY MEN LIVE LONG.

Authors Have Equal Chances with Others to Reach Old Age.

The general idea that literary production of a high order is hostile to long life by reason of the nervous wear and tear it necessitates would seem to be erroneous. Scott wore himself out at the age of 61 by excessive work, and Dickens, no doubt, lived at too high pressure—possibly the same might be said of Thackeray—but in the great majority of cases literary men possess that balance which avoids nervous exhaustion, and the literary life is a wholesome and normal one. In our own country the average life of twenty-nine leading writers from Jonathan Edwards down, is sixty-six years. In nearly every case, too, their productive powers have remained unimpaired by old age. The short life of Edgar Allen Poe is, of course, not to be attributed to the fact that he was a writer, but to the nervous worry resulting from false pride and shame at being unable to resist temptation. Bayard Taylor worked too hard and Lanier was broken by exposure in the civil war. Dr. Holmes and Whittier enjoyed the longest lives of any one of our writers, each passing his 86th birthday. Emerson, Longfellow and Bryant lived long and tranquil lives, and very few—perhaps not one—of American literary men shortened their lives by excessive devotion to their natural pursuit. The lives of great American writers are longer than those of their English counterparts by nearly four years, though two of the Englishmen—Carlyle and Newman—lived longer than any one of the Americans. The living American writers who seem to have done enough to entitle them to admission to our literary Valhalla are: Henry James, Brete Harte, Howells, Donald Mitchell, Weir Mitchell, Stedman, Stoddard, Aldrich, Fiske, Cable and Clemens. They average now 65 years old.—Chicago Journal.

GARDEN'S GROWTH IN HAWAII

Plants and Vines Produce Prolific Crops the Year Round.

Incredible reports of the productiveness of the soil of Hawaii have reached the agricultural department through Gov. Dole, who requested one of the principal farmers of Hawaii to furnish authentic information on this subject. This farmer says that almost every vegetable and fruit known to man will grow in the island in profusion. Peppermint, he says, grows wild. Four crops of potatoes have been produced in succession on the same piece of land within twelve months. This is not an extraordinary occurrence. Radishes become edible ten days after sowing. Strawberry vines bear fruit all the year. The berries are of the finest flavor. Cabbage grows all the year and it apparently makes no difference whether it is planted in the spring, summer, autumn, or winter. Parsley, once sown, grows forever, apparently. Lima beans continue to grow and bear for over a year, and they have to be gathered every week after starting to bear. Cucumbers bear the entire year and so do tomatoes which, with proper attention, bear for years. Raspberries bear for six months. Pineapples come int bearing when the plants are four months old and bear in abundance for years. Lettuce can be planted at any time, and it develops quickly. The same is true of celery. Wheat, corn, barley and oats produce only one crop each year, and this is not quite as good as the crops produced in other portions of the world.

How It Feels to Fall.

The Swiss Alpine climber, Sigrist, who once fell from the top of the Karpfstock, in Switzerland, described his sensation while falling as follows: "The plunge, which was taken backward, was in no wise accompanied by the anxiety such as one has when one dreams of falling. I seemed to be borne in the most pleasant manner gently downward and had complete consciousness during the entire fall. Free from all pain or fear, I contemplated my position and the future of my family, which I knew was assured by the insurance I carried. And, this contemplation was accomplished with a rapidity which I had never before known. Of the losing of my breath, of which people talk, there was no suggestion, and only the heavy fall on the snow-covered ground caused me to lose suddenly and painlessly all consciousness. The bruising of my head and limbs on the rocks as I fell caused me no pain. In fact, I did not feel it. I cannot conceive of an easier, pleasanter death. The reawakening, however, brought with it entirely different and far less agreeable sensations."—London Mail.

The Cure for Trusts.

If railroad rates are so manipulated that they sometimes favor the localities in which the plants owned by trusts are situated—and what disinterested student can deny this?—why should we hesitate, in season and out of season, to agitate the question of the control of the national highways? If patent laws are another reliance of the trusts, why should we hesitate to throw open to general use, in return for a reasonable compensation, every patent that is employed hereafter for monopolistic ends? These remedies would at least moderate the exactions of many of the trusts, and no further experience of greater knowledge ought to be needed to demonstrate the wisdom of employing all such means that stand so near at hand.—Atlantic Monthly.

900 IN DIRE PERIL

EXCURSION STEAMER STRIKES A ROCK AND SINKS IN TWENTY MINUTES.

MEN PROVE THEMSELVES HEROES

Many Women at First Alarm Jump Overboard and Are Rescued by Cooler Heads of Excursionists and Crew—Believed That All Were Saved—Women and Children in Hysterics.

New York, July 2.—The steamer Mohawk, owned by John H. Starin and used by him in carrying excursionists to Glen Island, struck a rock Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock just off New Rochelle with 900 passengers on board and sunk in less than twenty minutes. She lies in about forty feet of water between Fort Slocum and Davenport's Neck. It is believed that all of the passengers escaped, although there are a few of them who are yet unaccounted for. The excursionists owe their lives to the coolness of the captain and crew of the sunken vessel and to the action of the men passengers, who bravely helped the women and children to get into life preservers and boats before Making Their Escape.

The passengers were employes of the John W. Green hat factories of Danbury, Conn. About one-half of them were women and children. The excursionists spent the day at the island and had a good time taking in the sights. The boat started back for South Norfolk at 5 o'clock with the band playing. She got well under way and was going up the sound at a good pace when just off Fort Slocum the passengers felt a sudden jar. They did not pay much attention to the shock until the steam from the boiler room came rushing up from below. Then the boat began to pound, and a shout went up from the lower decks that she had struck a rock.

A Panic Was On.

By this time everybody aboard realized that the boat was sinking and a panic was on. People rushed up the companionways to the upper decks and began to tear down the life preservers. The captain and crew ran among them and tried to quiet them. "Don't jump overboard," they shouted. "There is no danger; everybody will have time to get ashore." They succeeded in keeping fairly good order among the men, but most of the women and children were in hysterics, and many sprang overboard. Several steamers and sailboats in the vicinity came quickly to the rescue and took the passengers out of the water. The party was taken to South Newark, from which city they went by train to Danbury.

INDIAN GROWTH ON DECREASE.

Blue Book Just Issued Shows Over £18,000,000 Expended in Famine Relief.

London, July 2. — A blue book on India, just issued, shows that £18,390,000 was expended for the relief of famine sufferers during the year 1899-1900. The mortality from the plague for the five years ending March, 1901, was nearly 600,000. The census completed in March, 1901, shows that the increase in population during the last ten years was only 5,000,000 to 6,000,000, instead of the normal 19,000,000. The loss represents deaths from famine and the deaths in consequence of the famine.

Felts, assisted by John Justice, deputy United States marshal, and a posse of six men, went to the Kentucky side of Tug river early yesterday morning and captured nine persons who were charged with terrorizing the miners on the West Virginia side of the river for the past ten days by shooting at all who could not give the proper strikers' sign as they passed along the railroad. They were all brought to this place and held under a heavy guard awaiting the train to take them before a Kentucky judge who remanded them to Judge Jackson at Parkersburg, this state. They were surprised in their sleep with their Winchesters under their pillows and surrendered with but little resistance. Even their guard was captured asleep on duty. HEAT IS INTENSE

HOT WAVE EXTENDS OVER A WIDE AREA AND CAUSES MUCH SUFFERING.

HEAT CAUSES NUMEROUS DEATHS

Remarkably High Temperatures Shown by Weather Reports—Poor Prospect of Immediate Relief—Many Deaths and Prostrations in New York—Awful Scorching in Chicago.

Washington, July 2. — Intense heat prevailed here all day and far into the night. The sun shone with relentless fury from a cloudless sky all day and there was scarcely a breath of air to temper the atmosphere. During the afternoon the temperature at the weather bureau was 98 degrees, and it maintained a high record throughout the evening. Reports to the weather bureau from points through the hot wave area show remarkably high temperatures generally, with little or no rainfall, and but poor prospects for any substantial relief in the next forty-eight hours in the eastern part of the country. In the South Atlantic and Middle and East Gulf states there were local rains and thunderstorms yesterday, and in the extreme Northwest cooler weather came from local showers. High temperatures continued in districts east of the Rocky mountains. At New York the maximum, 98 degrees, broke the record there for June, and at Philadelphia the maximum, 98, equaled the highest temperature previously recorded there.

Some of the high temperatures reported at the bureau were the following: Atlantic City, 94; Boston, 92; Chicago, 98; Cincinnati, 96; Davenport, Iowa, 98; Denver, 94; Des Moines, 96; Indianapolis, 94; Jacksonville, 94; Kansas City, 98; Little Rock, 90; Marquette, Mich., 96; Memphis, 90; New Orleans, 94; North Platte, Neb., 92; Omaha, 98; Pittsburg, 94; St. Paul, 90; Springfield, Ill., 98; Vicksburg, Miss., 90; Washington, D. C., 98, and St. Louis, 100.

Many Deaths in New York.

New York, July 2.—The relief from the killing heat of the past week which was promised yesterday in the shape of thunderstorms, did not materialize. Instead, the temperature increased, there was less breeze than the day before, and what little air did stir was surcharged with heat. There was scarcely a cloud all day to shield the city's populace from the sun's beaming rays. As it was Sunday, when the majority of the city's workers were idle, the list of deaths and prostrations from the heat was slightly decreased over that of Saturday. In spite of this fact, however, eleven deaths and nineteen prostrations were reported up to 9 o'clock last night. There were several deaths and prostrations in Brooklyn. Various points throughout New England report extremely high temperature.

Victims of Heat.

Pittsburg, July 2.—Between midnight Saturday and midnight Sunday eleven deaths directly traceable to the effects of heat and fifteen prostrations are recorded. In addition to this many children have succumbed as evidenced by the burial permits issued. In the past eighteen hours fifty-nine permits have been issued, three-fourths of which were for children under four years of age. The normal death rate is sixteen.

CHICAGO ROASTED.

Heat Breaks All Records Since 1872.

Chicago, July 2—The heat in Chicago yesterday broke all records for June since 1872. For three hours in the afternoon the government thermometer in the weather bureau at the top of the Auditorium tower registered 97. In many places in the street it was 104 and 106. A northwest breeze brought some relief after nightfall, but at 11 o'clock the mercury was again soaring around 90. There was intense suffering throughout the city, especially in the poorer districts and the police ambulances were kept busy picking up victims who had succumbed to the heat. No fatalities were reported, but several of those who were prostrated are in a serious condition.

BIG BALANCE IN OUR FAVOR

Forthcoming Report Will Show a Total Foreign Trade for the Fiscal Year Ending June 30 of $2,400,000,000—Will Stimulate Efforts of Foreign Countries to Retain More Business.

Washington, June 28. — The fiscal year of the government ends June 30. The forthcoming showing of the foreign trade of the United States will make a wonderfully interesting document, as it unquestionably places the United States in the front rank of business prosperity.

The returns so far at hand warrant estimates that will bring the total foreign trade to $2,400,000,000. Of this sum $1,500,000,000 represents the exports, $900,000,000 the imports, and the balance in favor of the United States is $600,000,000. The value of the manufactured product exported was $500,000,000.

SONS OF ELI WIN

YALE DEFEATS HARVARD IN ONE OF THE PRETTIEST RACES EVER WITNESSED.

HARVARD MAKES A HARD FIGHT

Yale Captures the 'Varsity and Freshmen Eight-Oar Events and Harvard Finds Consolation in Taking the 'Varsity Four-Oar Race—Great Crowds Witness the Struggle.

New London, June 29. — In a race never excelled on the Thames Yale's 'varsity crew won the great inter-university rowing event of the year in the last half-mile of the four-mile course by a scant two lengths.

The magnificent contest was witnessed by thousands from observation trains, yachts and points of vantage along the bank. To Yale also fell the honor of a victory in the freshman race, while Harvard takes consolation in the fact that her 'varsity four walked away from the Yale quintet handsomely.

The big race was rowed down stream in the cool of the evening shortly after 7 o'clock. The conditions were fairly favorable. The wind, out of the southwest, blew diagonally against the crews at the rate of about six miles an hour. A beautiful start with the two eights rowing stroke for stroke began a contest that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

Harvard Takes the Lead.

Harvard immediately took the lead. Her stalwart oarsmen retained it for a mile and a half. At the two-mile flag Yale had cut down the Harvard lead and drew ahead only to lose again before a half-mile had been traveled. For still another half the Cambridge boys held on. The excitement was intense. Both crews by this time had dropped to an unusually slow stroke, at times the rate being scarcely thirty. Yale's endurance, however, was up to the standard, and as the two shells approached the three and a half-mile flag the Elis spurted magnificently. Harvard heroically responded, but it was Yale's day. She took the lead and not only kept it, but drew away rapidly in the last quarter mile until the finish was reached, when Yale tore across the line barely two lengths ahead, with Harvard rowing manfully. The victory for Yale is due to the splendid power of her oarsmen and the of Coxswain Chittenden. With great foresight he refused to push his men until the supreme moment. This care found his men ready. Harvard had shot her bolt earlier and Yale had added another to her long list of victories. The race was a hard one for Harvard to lose; a magnificent one for the winners. The end found Goodell, the bow oar in the Harvard shell, in a state of collapse. It was necessary to lift him from his seat into the launch. In the Yale shell Stroke Cameron, too, was in distress, but he was able to help himself to the Yale launch. The other oarsmen were all strong and in good condition.

The freshmen eights contest was an easy one for the Yale youngsters, Harvard being four and a half lengths to the rear. Harvard's four won with marvelous ease by six full lengths. No records were broken and the time for the 'varsity race was unusually slow, probably because of an unexpectedly low stroke and the cross wind.

NO LIVES WERE LOST

By the Latest Flood in West Virginia.

Roanoke, Va., June 29.—The flood of Wednesday night at Pocahontas did not cause any loss of life so far as is known. Water was three feet deep in some sections of the town. The most damage was to railroad tracks. It was a heavy downpour, but not a cloudburst. The storm in Tazewell county seems to have been worse than at first thought. Each day brings meager details of the calamity which has befallen that community. Dry Fork, which has been entirely cut off from outside communication since Saturday up to this time has added three more victims to the death list. Numerous estimates have been made as to the amount of damage in Tazewell county to farm lands, mill property, residences, loss of crops and stock, but nothing definite can be determined. It is estimated at from $125,000 to $700,000. The list of dead in Tazewell county, so far as known, numbers twelve.

ROBBERS GOT $9,000.

Great Excitement Over the Robbery of a County Treasurer.

Minden, Neb., June 29. — Minden is greatly excited over the assault late Thursday night of County Treasurer Norlin and the robbery and firing of the court house. The treasurer had gone to the court house and worked until 9:45, when he locked the door and went to a restaurant. On his return he locked the door and went to work again. After possibly five minutes there seemed to be a flash and he knew no more until returning consciousness revealed the robbery and that the papers in the room were on fire. He staggered to the door and gave the alarm. After the fire company had extinguished the flames they found the money drawer broken open and the vault looted. A conservative estimate places the loss at about $9,000. A special meeting of the board of supervisors was held and a reward of a thousand dollars was offered for the apprehension of the robbers.

FURIOUS ELECTRICAL STORM.

It Does Much Damage to Property at Ann Arbor, Mich.

The court house tower was struck and the clock there is put out of business. The roof was blown from the gas company's building. Lightning also struck a street car crowded with people. The incandescent light globes broke with loud reports and caused a panic among the passengers. One lady in the crowd had part of her garments badly burned, but there were none seriously injured.

CHAPTER XXXV—(Continued.)

"The drink had given me courage, and I thought I'd go and ask him to kape me in his service, for it was a good place, miss, and he was a kind master to the man as did his duty. I stole up to the window, when, peering in, I found the room quite empty, and only the open safe staring me in the face.

"I was a poor man, miss, and to-morrow I might be homeless and penniless, for I had spent all of my wages upon drink. I had not much time to think it over, for, at any minute, he might come back. The temptation was too great, miss, of all that pile of notes and bonds.

"'He'll not even miss 'em,' the devil said to me, and in another moment they were in my hand; and I had made my escape.

"I crept back along in the shadow, when some one passed me. It was young Mr. Talbot, miss. I watched him go into the library, and was slinking away, when suddenly a hand fell on my shoulder.

"I thought as that was the devil, and shure, miss, since that night I've known that I was not wrong, though it was Mr. Chester's shape he'd taken.

"'You miserable thief!' he hissed in my ear. 'A nice term of years you'll serve for this!'

"I fell on my knees, then, miss, and begged and begged for mercy.

"'I'll spare ye, on one condition,' he said; 'that ye put the crime on the man who followed ye into the library, and that ye obey me in all that I tell ye to do.'

"What could I do but obey him, miss? While I was thinking on it, my teeth chattering in my head, some one ran past me.

"'There's yer man!' cried Mr. Devil. 'Seize hold of him; I'll bring other help. We'll drag him back to the house. Deliver up your booty, and swear that you saw him throw it away from him.'

"Well, miss, it takes long to tell ye, but it did not take long for him to make me understand. Ye know the rest, Miss Beatrice, and how the miserable plot was hatched. I'm in your power, now, miss, but I kinder feel a load is lifted off my mind. It's like selling myself to an angel, and giving up my 'prenticeship to the devil."

He was still upon his knees, still held in his rough, red hands the hem of her black dress.

She had not thought to bid him rise. She had forgotten time and place; yet the minutes, one by one, were slipping by—the minutes which were to assign her to a fate which each second revealed to her in a more forbidding aspect.

Had she possessed this knowledge earlier it might have saved her; but now it was too late. To prove Randolph Chester's villainy could not silence nor wipe the stain from her dead mother's memory.

Yet, oh, to bind this wary spider in his cruel web! If she could but clear her thoughts—could see her way through this dread labyrinthe of horrors!

She covered her face with her hands. Tyrrell slowly rose to his feet, when out from the shadow loomed another figure.

"Courage!" said a voice. "I think that I can help you both!"

CHAPTER XXXVI.

To Beatrice both voice and face were alike wholly unfamiliar, but Tyrrell started with a start of recognition. It was the stranger who that morning had accosted him at the lodge door, and with whom he had held such long and earnest converse.

"You did not tell me all to-day, my man," he said. "Not even the whisky set your tongue quite loose; but the rest of the story, to which I have just listened, is no surprise to me. As for you, Miss Markham, you need not fear to give me your confidence. I made a mistake in putting the note Mr. Talbot sent you in the wrong room, and letting that handsome she-devil at the house get her first inkling of our secret. But I'm going to make up for that to-day. I'm in Mr. Talbot's service, and he told me that if I showed you this at any time, you would not fear to trust me."

And he drew from his pocket a card, on which were inscribed a few words in Bertram's writing: but it had grown too dark for Beatrice to distinguish either. Still, drowning men cling to straws, and she must trust some one.

"You are not deceiving me?" she asked.

"Take the card. When you go into the light it will reassure you. Meantime, tell me into what immediate place Mr. Chester proposes forcing you. You must temporize, not rebel, until we, too, can lay the proper train."

"But to-night he has promised to bring me the papers—the papers he has stolen from this place where Tyrrell had hidden them: and in return for their possession I am to become his wife. This I have sworn. But one thing can be done—to wrest them from him—and this is impossible. He has them, and will hold them to the bitter end."

"Shure, and I'm not confident, miss, as it's he that stole 'em away from here, for only this morning he came whining to me to give 'em to him."

"But who else could have taken them? Ah, there is no help, no help!"

"Are you sure of that?" asked another voice, low, earnest, respectful. "Beatrice, have you confidence for all the world but me?"

It was Allen Layton who had put the question—Allen Layton, who had seen her flight from the house and, fearing danger, had followed her, as the detective had followed Tyrrell from the lodge.

The meeting seemed strange and unnatural, but, in reality, it was simple enough, only it was a conference now of four, instead of two, and strength lay in their numbers.

"You are not deceiving me?" asked Beatrice. "Oh, then, I'm not alone—not friendless, not deserted, both by God and man!"

"Yes, I will help you, Beatrice, and heaven has opened to me the way. I have heard all. I have felt myself guilty of no ignoble eavesdropping, for I listened devoted to your cause, determined to defend you, should need arise, and protect you in any case. Listen, dear child! Two nights ago the hot air of the house stifled me, and I had gone out for a little walk in the grounds. I was about returning, when I saw the figure of a man drop from one of the windows of my room. I was but a few feet distant from him, but the darkness wholly concealed me, although the light from within enabled me to distinguish him as he groped his way along the shadow of the wall. Suddenly I saw him stop; I saw him thrust his arm into an aperture, and I believed that there he had concealed his booty. I was about to raise an alarm, but something—I ascribe it to Providence—checked the impulse. I determined instead to follow and be able to identify the man—to discover if he was one in the hired service of my host. I tracked him to the lodge. I saw him enter, and as he opened the door and the light streamed upon his face, I fully recognized him. I then returned to the spot he had just left. I found the aperture; I found the papers. Fear nothing; I have them still!"

Hitherto there had been no interruption to his story; but now Beatrice's sobs burst out thick and fast.

The withes of the cruel web were still about her wings, but she fancied the shadow from the sunlight of her deliverer was falling about her and betokened the latter close at hand. She was shivering in her rich furs, and the air blew keen and chill.

"Hush, dear!" said Layton, gently. "Let me go on. There is little more to tell. I felt prompted to carry the package to my host, but, somehow, I could not do it. You had inspired me with your distrust! They, at least, are safe in my possession, and I deemed it wisest to await events. Thank God that I did! This afternoon I saw Randolph Chester and talked with him. I told him that I believed he was dealing falsely with you, and that if I could prove it he must answer to me! Of course, the bond of friendship between us was forever broken by my words. He smiled and defied me. After leaving him I looked over the package to see what the contents might relate, and judge of my future action concerning them. One paper, Beatrice, is the will of your father. That I have not read; its seals are unbroken. One is the certificate of your parents' marriage—the death certificate of your mother's former husband, one year before your father met her, and the certificate of your own birth. My child, you have nothing more to fear from the dead ashes of an honored and an honorable past!"

Beatrice now had hushed her sobs. No one saw her face in the darkness, but it was illumined with the light and gladness of an incomparable ecstasy. She sank upon the cold, bare ground upon her knees and clasped her hands in reverence.

"Thank God! thank God!"

Gently Layton lifted her and threw his arm about her for support.

"I have a plan to propose," said the stranger among them; and again his voice was the voice of the old man.

They gathered about him and heard him to the end.

"Do you consent, Miss Markham?" he asked, when he had ended.

"Yes," she answered.

"Are you strong enough?" asked Allen, anxiously.

"Strong enough!" she answered. "Now—now do you think that my strength will fail me? Now, when I look back and thank God that I may whisper my sainted mother's name without tremor and without blush! Besides—"

"Hush!" pleaded Layton. "Even the air must not suspect us. Come—you may be missed."

At the entrance door she paused, and as his head was bowed, he felt her kiss upon his hand.

"Such men as you," she whispered low, "redeem the world."

"Such men as I!" he thought, sadly, as he retraced his steps to where the others were awaiting him. "Yet I had not strength to let her utter his name—the name of the man to whom I must forever resign her, and my own happiness. Beatrice, my love, my love!"

But this time the cry was not the cry of ecstasy, but the wail of bitter anguish—a strong man's agony, and the supreme sacrifice of a noble life.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

In her own room Beatrice once more awaited Randolph Chester's coming. He had promised her the papers—she had promised him her consent.

The clock on the mantel struck 8, when she heard outside the expected step.

She rose and opened the door before he could request admittance.

"You bring me the papers?" she said.

His face was very pale, and his eyes were blazing like lurid coals. His lips were firmly met in one rigid line.

"No, Beatrice," he answered; "I have failed in securing them. It is the first failure of my life. Were I a superstitious man, I might regard it as an ill-omen. Happily, I am not. Moreover, I will still do all that I promised you. I will go to Naples, and obtain there the proof that you require. I possess information that has recently come to me, which will enable me to do this. I have lately heard the true story regarding you father's True, his wife was married before, but she was sold to a brutal man by her parents. He was killed in a drunken brawl on her wedding day, and so she was released from her hated vows. She was, indeed, educated for the operatic stage, and all else that you have heard concerning her is true: but she was your father's lawfully-wedded wife. Beatrice, will you go with me to Italy to prove my words true? Decide, and to-night. Our marriage must take place this very night, or to-morrow the choice will be no longer yours."

"You will not give me until to-morrow?" she pleaded.

But her cheeks had not paled, and there was a strange ring in her tone he could not understand.

"I will not give you yet another hour," he answered. "Will you consent?"

"You will tell them all, before the ceremony takes place, that I am the inheritor of an honored name, and heiress to my father's wealth—in reality, mistress in my own home?"

"Yes, I will tell them all."

"Come for me in half an hour, then; I will be ready. No!" holding up one hand to warn him back, as he was about to approach her—"I must have my last hour of freedom wholly my own!"

He paused.

"Beatrice, you will not fail me?"

"My word is pledged," she answered.

But when the door had closed upon him, she walked quickly to one of the windows and threw it open.

"Let me have air!" she gasped. "To breathe the same atmosphere with him is poison!"

Scarce had the clock chimed the half-hour before he returned.

But what a wonderful change had taken place during his absence!

It was, indeed, the old Beatrice Markham who stood before him—Beatrice—dazzling, brilliant, radiant—as he had never seen her. She had cast aside her mourning, and greeted him as a bride—beautiful, peerlessly beautiful, in her white satin robe, her neck and arms bare and unjeweled, her lips parted in a smile.

A sudden fear smote him. A shadow fell across his face.

"You are displeased with me?" she said. "You do not wish me to wear the garments of a bride?"

"Displeased with you, my love?" he answered, her words dispelling his fears. "A thousand times, no! But my happiness—the happiness for which I have so long hungered—terrifies me with its magnitude. You have scorned me so long! and to-night—to-night—"

"To-night is the dawn of the new day," she replied. "Come!"

THE TRAINING OF BOYS.

Wise Mother Is She Who Tries to Forget the Danger of Broken Legs and Arms.

An excess of care is often as bad as no care at all. The mother must often shut her eyes on the playground. I have seen it done with good effect under difficult conditions. I have seen a mother sit at her sewing in a great barn, and pretend not to be aware that her boys were spanning the beams overhead, crawling on loose poles and hanging to wooden pegs, thinking it great fun to get the length of the barn, close under the ridge pole without her knowledge. I have seen the boys sitting with hushed breath in the thick foliage of a tree top, fearful lest the mother should get "worried"—and the mother, all this while, knowing the truth, wisely turned her back, and courageously called up all instances where boys have not fallen from treetops. She never knew how much sturdiness and agility was getting planted in those small legs, until one of the boys became the champion high-jumper in college. Nor had she much occasion to salve over her bruises. A little St. John's wort in ruddy oils was about the only healing preparation brought into requisition. They were learning something else all the while, those boys. One sweet night the mother heard one say to the other, as they slid into bed: "Dickie, grandpa's coming to-morrow, and we won't climb any trees while he is here, 'cause it will make him sad." And they climbed no trees for six weeks; but they rowed in the harbor in their small boat, not knowing that grandpa sat on the shore, silent and miserable. So much, as have said elsewhere, do we play at hide and seek in this world.—Harper's Bazar.

Salisbury Scared at Dinner.

Lord Salisbury is one of the most genial of men when seated with his friends at a well-laden dinner table. One evening while so situated he had been keeping the whole company alive by his conversation, when suddenly he stopped short in what he was saying, and his face was seen to become grave and anxious. After a pause of some minutes, during which his lordship sat speechless and motionless, his neighbor asked him what was the matter.

"It has come!" he muttered, in a voice of despair.

"What has come?" was the bewildered reply.

"It has come at last. The doctor said it must. I have been expecting it for these last ten years, and now it has come."

"But what has come?" asked the questioner, thoroughly frightened. "Are you ill?"

"I am seized with a paralytic stroke. I have pinched my leg again and again, but I can feel nothing."

"Oh, you can set your mind at rest on that point," was the reply. "It is my leg you have been pinching."—Chicago Chronicle.

Dodged It.

The Apostle Peter had just preached his wonderful sermon.

It had resulted in 3,000 converts.

"But how are you going to baptize so many at one time?" asked one of the ither preachers.

"If you please, brother," replied Peter, "we will not disturb the good feelings of the occasion by any discussion concerning the mode of baptism. Let us leave that for the sectarians of future ages."

And Now They Never Speak.

Mr. Parkslope—When a lady tells me it is her birthday, and I know she is past thirty-five, I find it best to change the subject, instead of asking how old she is.

Miss Babylon—What a coincidence, your speaking of it! This happens to be my birthday.

INDEPENDENCE DAY
1776
1801
JULY 4th

The Best of It

A Juvenile Sketch for Independence Day

The Crosspatch Man was sick again, and this time it must be pretty bad, for all the morning Meredith had been watching the servants spread straw before the house and muffle the big, shiny doorbell.

"Poor man!" mamma said, pitingly. "He is sick so often!"

"But he's a Crosspatch Man!" muttered Meredith stiffly. Then he repented and looked as shamefaced as a very little boy with a very round, dimpled face could look. "I'm so sorry he's ve-ry sick," he said slowly. "I s'pose it hurts even Crosspatch Men."

Mamma did not notice. She was having her little noon "gossip" with papa, and they were still talking about their invalid neighbor.

"It isn't quite so bad as it seems, you know," papa was saying. "He always has the straw laid down and things muffled when he has one of his worse nervous attacks. It doesn't mean all that it does in most cases. He is terribly afflicted by noise at almost any time.'

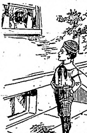
"Noise! I should think so!" That was from Meredith, who pricked up his ears at the word. Didn't he know how the Crosspatch Man felt 'bout a noise? Didn't he belong to the Rudd Street Second? Wasn't he captain? And oh, my, the times he'd seen the Crosspatch Man a-scowling and a-fuming when they marched past his window!

"But Fourth of July will be a terrible day to him—poor man!" went on mamma's gentle voice. That made Meredith start a little. He had been thinking about Fourth o' July, too. (Did he think of much of anything else nowadays?) He had been going over in his mind all the glorious program of the day. For the Rudd Street Second was going to celebrate in a worthy manner. They were going to even outdo themselves this year—and hadn't they had the proud honor of being the noisest street in the city for two Fourth o' Julys a-running? Let 'em just wait till they heard this Fourth o' July!

It was three days off. That would give the Crosspatch Man time to have the straw taken up and the bell unmuffled, for his worst "times" never lasted more than two or three days.

"Then he'll have to cotton up his ears," mused Meredith, philosophically, watching the big foreign servant that wore a turban go back and forth past the Crosspatch Man's window. The house Meredith lived in and the Crosspatch Man's house were quite close together, so it was easy to watch things.

Unfortunately for an invalid with the terrible affliction called "nerves," Rudd Street was a regular nest of boys. They were boys everywhere on it. You ran against boys when you went east, and boys ran against you when you went west. Boys sprang up in the most unexpected places. The houses seemed to be running over with boys. And really, there was at least one boy—and on an average two or three—in every house on Meredith's side, except in the Crosspatch Man's house. Oh, dear me, no, there weren't any boys there!



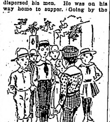
MEREDITH STOOD IN SHEER AMAZEMENT.

On the other side of the street you had to skip the "middlest" house and Miss Quilhot and Miss Eromathea's—oh, yes, and the minister's house, of which Miss Quilhot and Miss Eromathea were old maids, and the minister—oh, no, he wasn't an old maid, but you couldn't expect him to have boys in the house, for how could he ever write his sermons?

So it was, as I said, an unfortunate street to hav: "nerves" on. And the Crosspatch Man had so many!

The three days between soon went away, and it was the night—the very night—before it! There were only a few hours more, for, of course, you didnt' have to wait till the sun rose on Fourth of July.

Meredith had drilled the Rudd Street Second for the last time and dispersed his men. He was on his way home to supper. Going by the Crosspatch Man's house, he heard voices distinctly issuing from an open window. He couldn't help hearing, it was so quiet in the street. Perhaps it was the "lull before the storm."



HE MADE A LITTLE SPEECH.

"The sahib cannot bear it," a gentle soothing voice was saying, but Meredith recognized the indignation mixed with the pity in it. "The sahib will be again sick."

Then came Meredith's astonishment, for the Crosspatch Man's voice was answering, and it was quite calm and gentle; and it said:

"Of course I shall be sick again, Hari! I've made all my plans to perish. But what can you expect? The little chaps must have their Fourth o' July. I was a little chap myself—once. Shut the window, Hari. There's a suspicion of a draught."

Meredith stood still in sheer amazement, and watched the turban-man close the window. He was a little chap himself once, the Crosspatch Man was! And how kind his voice had sounded, too. It made him sorry for the crasspatch Man—sorrier than he had ever been before.

"He's a-dreadin' it like sixty. He's 'spectin' to perish," Meredith said aloud. "It's goin' to make him sick, of course—that's what he said to the turban-man. An' he was a little chap once, an' his voice was kind an' tired out."

Then Meredith went home and perched himself up on the banister post in the hall, to think. That was where he always thought things—big things, you know. This was, oh my, such a big thing!

"I'm cap'n," mused Meredith, knitting his little fair brows. "I can say, 'Go, an' thou ghost,' like the man in the Bible; but they'll be dreadful dis'pointed, the Rudd Street Seconds will be. Still—well, he sick an' he had a kind spot in his voice, an' he used to be a little chap too, so of course he used to bang things an' make noises. I don't think he sounded much like a Crosspatch Man."

In a little while, after a little more tough thinking, Meredith slipped down and out of the door, up the street. He got together the Rudd Street Seconds and made a little speech, as a captain may, to his men.

The next day the city and all America celebrated Fourth o' July, and Rudd Street was famous again, but this time for being the very quietest street in all the city! There were just as many boys in it, too, as ever.

The Crosspatch Man's white, nervous face smoothed and calmed as the day wore on, and at last it actually smiled in a gentle way, as if he was thinking about something pleasant.

And the captain of the Rudd Street Seconds and his brave men, drilling and popping and banging in a distant street, were happy, too.—Annie Hamilton Donnell.

The Hon. Joel R. Poinsett, a native of South Carolina, and one of her most gifted sons, during the latter part of the administration of John Quincy Adams, it will be remembered, represented the United States at the capital of Mexico, which was then much distracted by internal dissensions. While Mr. Poinsett resided there, the city was captured by one of the contending factions, and he and his family incurred no small degree of personal danger from the violence of the soldiers, by whom they were suspected of affording concealment to certain obnoxious individuals. In the height of the nullification controversy after his return, in an address delivered to the people of Charleston, the following eloquent passage occurs:

"Wherever I have been, I have been proud of being a citizen of this great republic, and, in the remotest corners of the earth, have walked erect and secure under that banner which our opponents would tear down and trample under foot. I was in Mexico when that city was taken by assault. The house of the American ambassador was then, as it ought to be, the refuge of the distressed and persecuted; it was pointed out to the infuriated soldiers as a place filled with their enemies. They rushed to the attack. My only defense was the flag of my country, and it was flung out at the instant that hundreds of muskets were leveled at us. Mr. Mason and myself placed ourselves beneath its waving folds. We did not blench, for we felt strong in the protecting arm of this mighty republic. We told them that the flag that waved over us was the banner of that nation to whose example they owed their liberty, and to whose protection they were indebted for their safety. The scene changed as by enchantment, and the men who were on the point of attacking my house and menacing the inhabitants, cheered the flag of this country, and placed sentinels to protect it from outrage. Fellow-citizens, in such a moment as that, would it have been any protection to me and mine to have proclaimed myself a Carolinian? Should I have been here to tell you this tale, if I had hung out the Palmetto and the single star? Be assured that to be respected abroad, we must maintain our place in the Union!"

Rival to Silken Fans.

A man without sense of romance has invented and patented a mechanichal hand fan, and sets it up as a rival of the toy gauze and lace which has been a feminine weapon through untold ages. His fan buzzes and is not beautiful, but it provides a steady draught of cool air.

In appearance it is a cross between an egg-beater and a glove-stretcher. It is made of wood and brass, and he asserts that, in expert hands, it can be made to reach a speed of 8,000 revolutions per minute, and will throw a current of air as far as an electric fan of the same size.

It works by compressing in the hand two wooden handles of a glove-stretcher-like arrangement. A ratchet and two small cog wheels at the end of the arms transmit the force to the blades of the fan, which are miniature electric fan blades. Both of these are detachable, so that the fan may be easily carried when not in use.

The inventor says that he has disposed of 4,000 of his hand fans in a few months. He isn't sanguine of its general adoption by the gentler sex, but he thinks that lots of men would use it in hot weather. Sentiment ought not to play any part in comfort-seeking, he says, but has to admit that it generally does.—New York Sun.

Better Than "Christian Science."

Jetmore, Kans., July 1st.—Mrs. Anna Jones Freeman, daughter of Mr. G. G. Jones of Burdett, and one of the most popular ladies in Hodgeman County, has been a martyr to headache. It has made her life a continual misery to her. She suffered pains in the small of the back, and had every symptom of Kidney and Urinary Trouble.

To-dayshe is as well as any lady in the state.

To-day she is as well as any lady in tirely to a remedy recently introduced here. It is called Dodd's Kidney Pills, and many people claim it to be an infallible cure for Kidney Diseases, Rheumatism and Heart Trouble.

Mrs. Freeman heard of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and almost with the first dose she grew better. In a week her headaches and other pains had gone, and she had left behind her all her illness and days of misery.

A medicine that can do for any one what Dodd's Kidney Pills have done for this lady, is very sure soon to be universally used, and already the demand for these pills has increased wonderfully in Pawnee and Hodgeman Counties, where the particulars of Mrs. Freemans case and its cure are known.

And nothing but the low, hoarse buzzing of the telephone wires answered her.

VEXED BY GOLD FIND

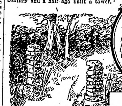
QUICKLY-GOTTEN TREASURE PLAGUE OF THEIR LIVES

Entanglements of a legal nature beset the paths of Messrs. Melville E. Wygant and John T. Redmond, two gold finders of Staten Island. The former owner of the property upon which the treasure was found has made a demand of $40,000 upon Mr. Wygant. Another member of the family has appeared to accept $200 for his claim. Every mail brings demands for gold. Their pot of treasure has become the plague of the discoverers' lives.

On this account they have spent anxious nights since they sprang into fame. They say that they stood over the treasure with shotguns, reinforced by bulldogs. One of the animals, according to Mr. Wygant, while performing his duty, was poisoned.

Legend of Treasure.

That at least a considerable quantity of the precious metal had been found there can be no doubt. Mr. John T. Redmond told the legend which accounted for the presence of the treasure. The occupant of the house a century and a half ago built a tower, on which were kindled beacons. These luring many a grand ship to destruction of the chill waters of the Kill von Kull. The wreckers abstracted doubloons from Spanish galleons and Louis d'Ors from French barks. These ill gotten gains are said to have been placed in the identical kettle which was found by Mr. Wygant and Mr. Redmond. They had engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Brown, an eminent young attorney, some days before they secured the contract for the demolition of the old house, which resulted in finding the treasure.



THE OLD FIREPLACE.

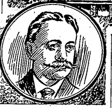
Everybody in Port Richmond knows "Mel" Wygant and his livery stable. He is a man of large dimensions and a merry eye. He is around fifty, and is counted one of the richest men in the village. He owns many houses. The story that he had found a lot of gold under the ruins of the old Hatfield house excited the whole village to the fever point. The old house was a landmark, and was over a hundred years old. For all that time it was the home of the Hatfields. Many tales are told of the Hatfields. The original Hatfield owned over 100 acres of land in the vicinity. The last Hatfield to live in the old house was John D. He died in 1892. Then it fell into the hands of John J. Hatfield. Mr. Charles Rosenberg, a wealthy New York merchant, bought the farm, and is cutting it into lots. The house was torn down to get it out of the way. After removing the house the contractor sold the stone to Mr. Wygant for $10. It was while digging in the masonry that he and Mr. Redmond found the pot containing, it is said, $40,000 in gold.

The gold is kept carefully hidden away in a safe somewhere on the island. Unless the claimants can identify it they cannot sue for its recovery, and the finders do not mean to let them identify it. They have hired a lawyer to take charge of the case.

Curious Christian Names.

One of the most curious names ever bestowed upon a girl is Airs and Graces. She is now about 3 years old, her name being registered at Somerset House, London, in 1898, when she was baptized. Her sister's name is equally unusual, Nun Niver. When Airs and Graces and Nun Niver arrive at the age of maturity at least one of them should marry a youth whose Christian name compares favorably; for example: Acts of the Apostles.

HATFIELD HOUSE.



MELVILLE E. WYGANT.

This is a name found in an English parish register: Acsapostle, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pegden, was baptized Aug. 2, 1795. Again this name figures in records in 1833, when Acts of the Apostles, son of Richard and Phebe Kennett, was baptized. This name, curious as it is, is preferable to What, or Dun Spiro Spero, names with which children have been handicapped.

It was a patriotic American who bestowed upon his young hopeful the name of Declaration of Independence. A most warlike name is Robert Alma Balaclava Inkerman Sebastopol Delhi Dugdale, who is an English innkeeper's son. A similar name is Richard Coeur de Lion Tyler Walter Hill.

Russia's Mighty Navy.

Russia's fleet consists of 22 first-class battleships, yielding to none in the world in excellence and perfection, though three or four of the Japanese battleships have certain qualities of superior weight; one second-class battleship, 16 coast defense ships, and 23 cruisers of the first-class, or fully armored. Twenty-three battleships and 23 cruisers, therefore, may stand as the backbone of Russia's naval strength, a force well seconded by full complements of coast defense ships, second- and third-class cruisers, gunboats, torpedo boats, torpedo destroyers, transports, auxiliaries and all that pertains to them. The Russian heavy guns are second to none and the batteries of 6-inch and 4.7-inch quick-firing guns leave nothing to wish for. The secondary small arm batteries are likewise perfectly equipped. The Russian warships are, in fact, the most numerously armed in the world.

Hill's Rise from a Day Laborer.

James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern railroad company, and now worth many millions, was at one time a day laborer in St. Paul, Minn. He was a stalwart, husky American and of great natural shrewdness. He got possession of a number of Manitoba land grants in some way or other and evolved an elaborate scheme for running a railroad out into that wilderness, dividing the land off into farms and city lots and selling it. He interested some of the richest men in his plan, talked them into putting up the money for the road and it was built. The lots were sold right off all right and the road was a success. Later on Hill got control of it, having started with nothing but some plans on paper. That was his beginning and he has been going ahead ever since. He is a wonderful money-maker.

The Compass Plant.

The compass plant is one of the most interesting growths on the great prairies of North America, and many fine specimens may be seen in botanical gardens. It is from three to six feet high, bears a pretty yellow flower and lives through a number of years. The name is derived from the fact that the edges of its radical leaves always point north and south, and the faces are therefore turned east and west.

Hunters, travelers and horsemen on the trackless prairies depend in great part upon this plant to get their bearings. Even on dark nights it serves as a guide. If the lost traveler can feel the edges of the leaves, he can at once locate the points of the compass. Longfellow in his beautiful poem of Evangeline refers to this plant when heroine over the western prairies in search of her exiled Acadian lover. Scientists ascribe the action of the leaves of the plant in always pointing north and south as due to the effect of light.

Wellington's Appetite Easily Suited.

The Duke of Wellington's personal tastes and habits, like those of most great men, were very simple. He cared not for show or pomp of any kind. In his diet he was very abstemious, even to the injury, it appears, of his health. He, of course, kept a first rate French cook for his guests. The cook, it is said, one day suddenly resigned. The duke in astonishment asked the reason.

"Was his salary insufficient?"

"No, my salary is very handsome. But I am not appreciated. I cook your dinner myself, a dinner fit for a king. You say nothing. I go out and leave the under-cook to cook your dinner. He gives you a dinner fit for a pig. You say nothing. I am not appreciated. I must go."

Passing of the Big Ranch.

Charles S. Goodnight, a pioneer ranchman in the Texas Panhandle a generation ago, says that this generation has seen the passing of the 1,000,000 acre ranch, and that immense tracts in one body have seen their day in Texas. Mr. Goodnight says that ten men with 10,000 acres each can operate more successfully than one man on 1,000,000 acres.

Good Reasoning.

"Don't you kinder hanker after respectability now an' den?" asked Plodding Pete.

"Oh, I dunno," answered Meandering Mike. "Sometimes I t'ink dat respectability ain' much more dan permission to work hard for what us people gits for nothin'."

ARE PAINTED TOO BLACK.

Spiders Are Deserving of More Consideration Than They Receive.

"There are many kinds of spiders besides those that annoy the housewife with their webs stuck up in the corners of the rooms and in the windows where she has been too busy with the sewing to look after the house much," says a recent writer on scientific subjects," but every kind is an appetite on eight legs and thoroughly convinced that no one can be strong and hearty that lives on vegetables. They all spin more or less, whence their name, which is a contraction of spinder or spinner. Also, they bite, and if you listen to all the fool stories that are told, when a spider bites you you will save time by sending for the lawyer to make your will and telegraph for the boys to come home at once if they want to see you alive. But I will tell you as between educated people that know a thing or two and do not get scared over every little trifle that a spider's bite is no worse than a mosquito's—not so bad, in fact. A big spider can kill a small bird with its poison, but it only makes a man's arm swell up and hurt for a day or less and not hurt very much at that. Bertkau could not feel the ordinary domestic spider on the thick skin of his hand, and only between the fingers could the spider make a puncture like that of a dull pin. The worse result was that it itched a little. Blackwall had them draw blood, but that was all. Though one spider bit another so hard that its liver ran out it lived for more than a year afterward. As for these terrible tarantulas, either the stories told about victims having to dance till they fell down in exhaustion in order to escape death and madness were tremendous whoppers or tarantulas don't bite as bad as they used to. It is true that in those days the Italian violinists had to work overtime composing tarantelles to play for the bitten, but still there were sneering skeptics that said it was all a scheme got up to pass the hat for the wife and family of the suffering man whom a malignant spider had bitten while he was out looking for a job. Dufour had a tarantula that was quite tame and gentle. She took flies from his fingers like a dear thing."

Sarah Grand's Wit.

Mme. Sarah Grand's lectures in England during the past winter have been attended with singular success. Clever, accomplished and charming, she talks brilliantly and lectures with easy grace and finish. People who have rushed to hear her in the hope that her lectures would savor of the problems in "The Heavenly Twins" and "Babs the Impossible," and who expected to be mildly shocked, have been disappointed. But they have been agreeably surprised in other ways by her sense of humor, which is the salt of her speaking as well as her writing. Recently she sent a London audience into screams of laughter when she responded to the cry from Australia—"Send us 2,000 wives." "In behalf of 2,000 English benedicts, I reply, 'Take ours! Take ours!'"

Pale Rose Cloaks.

As pale blue cloth cloaks were immensely smart last summer at the French watering places, so this year will be those in pale rose color. Sometimes the material is flannel, sometimes cloth, sometimes taffeta, always it has a certain air of being tailored that is a bit of a pretense considering the color, and, in some cases, the material. One of the prettiest models to come out as yet is in pale rose flannel, three-quarters length, laid from the shoulders in tiny tucks that are stitched almost to the hem. The cloak fastens with an ecru guipure scarf about the throat, knotting on one side, and then hanging in two long, broad ends to the hem of the cloak, confined at several points by straps of flannel, buttoned across with handsome gold buttons. The sleeve is wide and loose and hangs only a little below the elbow in order to show a full undersleeve of lace like the scarf. The garment is unlined.

Mission Chain Across Africa.

Rev. George Grenfell has been commissioned by Robert Arthington, a wealthy man of Leeds, England, to establish a chain of Christian missions across Africa. Mr. Grenfell has long been the friend and confidant of Leopold, king of the Belgians, by whom he was created a commander of the Royal Order of the Lion. He was selected by the king of the Belgians to act as a special commissioner for the delimitation of the Congo frontier, and traveled 1,000 miles on oxback during his journeyings, which occupied two years, and compelled him to occupy the same tent and dangerous surroundings for the whole of that time.

On Different Ground.

The term "help," meaning household or outside assistants engaged for short periods, occurs in the Massachusetts records of 1645, where help and servants are treated as separate, the latter being inferior. A "servant" in those days was not sui juris; "help" stood on different ground, and the distinction is still felt, however faintly. "Help" meant a free person; "servant" did not.

Like an Englishman.

The Englisman had been listening to several newspaper men who were ridiculing some alleged bits of humor in a John Bull publication, and at length blurted out, angrily:

"You Americans have beastly manners. You are always making fun of our jokes. I'm sure I don't see anything in them to laugh at."—Judge.

To Red Lake County Teachers.

You are hereby notified that ~~the third~~ annual summer school will convene in the high school building in the city of Red Lake Falls Monday, July 8th, at 8 o'clock A. M. and will contnue four weeks. Prof. P. J. Kuntz will again have charge of the school and he will be ably assisted by Prof. A. M. Locker, of Wabasha, a specialist in several branches especially music. This school has been secured upon the promise of a large attendance; it is for your benefit and it is earnestly desired that you make it a success by attending the whole term. Several new features will be introduced into the work this year, among them being the model school taught by one of the teachers. Instructions in music and elocution will be another important factor in the success of the school. Due consideration will be given certificates of attendance both in the fall examinations which will be held immediately after the close of session, and in my recommendation of teachers for the schools of the county.

You are advised that the law permits you to close your school in order to attend the training school and in the few instances where there is but one or two weeks left of the term, I would suggest that you arrange to have it put into the next year's term in order that you may be present the first week. All persons over 15 years of age are eligible to attend, provided they expect to teach. Again I urge you to attend and and insist none will be excued without a good and valid reason.

TALK WITH EDDY.

He's Working Hard to Open Up the Reservation.

Congressman Eddy was in Minneapolis last week and interviewed by the Minneapolis Journal he said that he was paying special attention to the opening of the Red lake reservation. The secretary of the Interior has promised send an agent to confer with the Indians and endeavor to make an agreement for the cession of this tract. It is expected that Major James H. McLaughlin, Indian inspector, will be selected to do this work. If he is successful, the matter will be taken up by the next congress. The tract comprises in all about 11 townships, in Red Lake and Marshall counties, of fine agricultural land. Mr. Eddy says there was no move being made toward opening the White Earth reservation.

City Council.

The city council held a meeting Monday evening, but transacted very little business of importance.

A number of bills were allowed and a sidewalk was ordered built on the west side of Main avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets.

The matter of building a ditch on the line between the city and the town of Rocksbury on the east side of the river, to drain what is known as the Connelly slough was discussed, but action will be taken until it is found what amount of the expense the town authorities will pay. It requires a ditch 2,000 feet long and the estimated cost is $225.

While no action was taken in regard to the proposed improvements to the city hall, the work will undoubtedly be done. The improvements proposed are the building of a thirty foot addition to the rear end of the building and the re-modeling of the rooms.

The statistical report of the United States geological survey for the year 1900 shows that this country leads in the production of coal. Prior to 1899 Great Britain was the largest coal producer, but we took the lead that year and have held it. The total production in the United States last year was the largest in the history of the country, being 267,542,444 tons or an increase over the previous year of nearly fourteen million tons. The statistical expert says that in spite of the enormous production there is hardly a possibility of exhaustion as the supply seems to be almost endless.

It is not expected that the railroad will be completed as far as Blackduck until late next fall. The appraisers of so much of the real and personal estate of the late Benjamin Harrison as lies in Marion county, Ind., have reported to the court that its total value is $354,525, the real estate being valued at $184,500. The most valuable piece of property is his old homestead in Indianapolis, which is apprised at $40,000. In consequence of the increased demand for horse flesh as an article of food, the Hygienic Society of Paris has urged upon the municipal council the necessity of providing a larger slaughter house than that at present existing where animals that have outrun their usefulness as carriers and haulers may be killed and cut up for the butchers. Only about twenty horses can be killed and disposed of daily at the present slaughter house, and it is estimated that a place with a killing capacity of not less than 30,000 a year is necessary to keep up with the demands of the Parisians for the meat.

A New York dairyman makes the suggestion that farmers who are supplying city markets should name their places, and so establish a sort of trademark for their products. "Lookout Farm," for instance, would stick in the memory of customers, and if the name were stamped on superior articles only, it would not be long before the Lookout Farm butter, cheese and eggs would command the best prices. The dairyman adds that those who are looking for country places will give more for those that have an established name and reputation. In short, it would pay the farmer to advertise judiciously, as it pays any other business man.

While his mother lay dead at her home in Columbus, O., Col. A. B Coit delivered a Memorial address to 2,000 people at Delaware. He was chosen orator of the day some time ago, but after he had written a speech his mother was taken seriously ill. On the evening before Decoration day Mrs. Coit called her son to her bedside and requested that he read the speech to her. After the colonel had finished his mother said in a faint whisper: "That is a good speech, my son. Now, promise me that no matter how ill I am you will not disappoint your Delaware audience." The colonel gave his word as requested, and though his mother died before morning he delivered the address according to the program.

Mrs. Laura Schwichtenberg, a wealthy widow of New York, has decided to devote her life to the new leper colony on the island of Cebu, one of the Philippine group. Some time ago she received, at her own urgent request, an appointment as government inspector of hospitals in the Philippines, at which time she visited the leper colony, declaring that her commission took that in, as the whole colony was a hospital. She was greatly impressed with the lack of sanitary conditions prevailing, with the hopeless condition of the 30,000 lepers congregated there, and especially with the large number of sad children. "I did not see a single happy-faced child there," she says. "The scenes still haunt me. I long to return and take a little sunshine into their lives."

While M. Waldeck-Rousseau, the premier of France, and his wife were riding along the streets at Havre in an auto-car a young rowdy threw a rotten orange, which hit Madame Waldeck-Rousseau in the face. The premier became so enraged that he turned the auto-car on to the man who threw the missile, running him down in a short distance. The man was seized and handed over to the police. He proved to be a leading member in the Society of young Nationalists, an organization bitterly hostile to the existing French government.

ABOUT THE CROPS.

Weather Bureau Reports Too Much Rain.

The latest weather bureau bulletin summarizes the crop situation as follows:

A week of frequent local showers with rainfall in all parts of the state, but unevenly distributed as to amount. In all parts the soil has all the moisture it can receive without injury to the crops, except in scattered places in the south; in the low lands of the Red river valley many grain fields were flooded. On the 28th heavy rains were accompanied by destructive high winds from Chippewa county eastward into Wisconsin, and large areas of crops in Renville and Stearnes counties were devastated by hail. The day temperatures were about 90 degrees in the southern part of the state every day except the 29th, and nearly 100 degrees on the 24th, 25th and 26th. This great and continued heat was very severe on man and beast and many prostrations are reported. The abundant rainfall and high temperatures have caused a rapid growth of all vegetation, and all crops, except flax, are very promising on the whole. Barley, which is very rank, and oats have lodged in small areas. Wheat seems to have a strong plant and no injury is reported, except in some very wet parts of Polk and Norman counties. Rye is ripening rapidly, and its harvest has begun in the south. Winter wheat will soon be ripe. Corn is improving, but some of it is still small and some fields are grassy. Flax is uneven; much of it was affected by the frost of June 7, and now grasshoppers are injuring it in northern counties; the early sown is in bloom in the south. Potatoes are generally very good. Grass has been cut for hay during the week and some of it has been spoiled by the rains.

TANGLE IN CHILD LABOR LAW.

Loophole by Which Employers May Evade the Act.

The state labor commission has discovered a tangle in the child labor law which may have to be taken to the courts for adjustment. The law provides that no child under fourteen years of age shall be employed in any factory or workshop or about any mine. No such child shall be employed in any mercantile establishment nor in the service of any telegraph, telephone or messenger service except during vacation.

In defining "factory" the law is conclusive. But in explaining the scope of the word workshop the law is broad and loose. It calls a workshop any premises, not a factory, wherein any labor is exercised by way of trade or for the purpose of gain in or incidental to any process of making, altering, repairing, cleaning, ornamenting, finishing or adapting for sale any article or part of an article. The law also fails to define a mercantile establishment.

Within the meaning of workshops many mercantile establishments which engage in cleaning and repairing and making hats and other garments, and which have been regarded by the commission as purely mercantile, would naturally fall. But the commission has held that they were mercantile establishments. Now, when an inspector forbids the employment of a child in a workshop which is an adjunct of a store it is possible for the proprietor to contend that the child is employed in merely mercantile pursuits and refuse to discharge him.

Carbolic Acid by Mistake.

Wabasso, Minn., July 4.—By mistake Mrs. N. J. Hubbard took a dose of carbolic acid instead of peppermint. She will recover.

I ask her if she loves me,
  She shakes her head, and when
I turn to leave she sweetly smiles,
  And lures me back again.

"Alas! you love another!"
  In angry tones I say;
She nods, but as I turn to leave
  She sweetly bids me stay.

With outstretched arms I offer.
  My love—my all to her,
And seek to clasp her, but she cries:
  "Stand back! How dare you, sir?"

With sinking heart and hopeless
  I turn once more, and lo!
I hear a soft, sweet voice that says:
  "I wish you wouldn't go."

I throw my arms around her,
  And press her to my heart,
And, after while, when she gets time,
  She says: "You think you're smart!"

Limitations of Miss Lane.

BY JULIA VALENTINE BOND.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

A man and a girl—that most ancient of combinations—with its endless chain of possibilities—are seated side by side on a bank of coarse grass and gray boulder, looking seaward. The old duel of the sexes has been waging between them for the best part of an hour, but as yet neither party has been worsted. There are no seconds, unless a small boy disporting himself in the middle distance could so be counted. At any rate he serves as a sort of time-rest to the conversation, occasionally drawing the attention of the pair to himself by the narrowness of his escapes from bodily injury. His efforts are directed toward fixing a flagpole on a tree in honor of the approaching Fourth of July. Dr. Randall hazards the prophecy that one of these days Jack Hughes will kill himself.

"Not he," says Miss Lane cheerfully; "but I wish he'd come down. I love boys who want to do dangerous things, but I can't bear to see them at it."

"You're simply," he says, "the most feminine woman I've met."

"And is that why you like me?"

"One of the whys. There are others."

"I don't think I like the obvious," returns Miss Lane. "It is as bad to be labeled feminine as being called sweet or good-hearted."

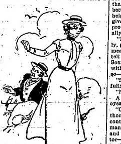
"You couldn't be the first without being the two last. Why, I wonder, do women gird so at belonging to their own sex? Do you ever hear a man object to being called a manly fellow?"

"I deny that we do gird at it. It is only the never getting beyond one's limitations. Suppose one is a primrose by a river's brim; you don't want to be that and nothing more. It is the eternal feminine I object to."

The man smiles beneath the shelter of his hat brim.

"Getting beyond your limitations," he says, "confessedly out of your depths. Who appears to advantage, man or woman, in that situation?"

"What are a woman's limitations?" impatiently. "I mean, of course, your idea of them. I know all men have a cut-and-dried theory on the subject, ready for use at a moment's notice."



"I Have No Patience," began Miss Lane.

"Evidently you agree with Hardy's peasant that 'men are a very poor class of society.'"

"Do I?" she laughs. "Ask any of the women over there"—pointing in the direction of the little summer settlement across the hill—"they will tell you Miss Lane is never so happy as when she has a man tagging at her heels."

"And you deny that your sex is spiteful?"

"That isn't spiteful, after all, perhaps," ruefully. "I dare say it is only true. I do like them—I," lamely, "have always been accustomed to them."

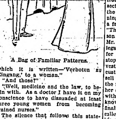
"Don't annihilate me for saying therein lies the chief charm of the feminine woman."

"Oh! no. You're welcome to your opinion. I believe I even asked for it."

"You did. You said, 'What are woman's limitations?' And you accused me of having a cut-and-dried answer. But you didn't wait for it. I was about to say I'd never found a woman's limitations."

"Then," calmly, "you were about to tell an untruth. There was never yet a man who hadn't set the boundary for his fellow-woman."

"You don't mind if I smoke?" She nods permission. "I admit there are just one or two walks in life over which it is written—'Verboten zu Eingang,' to a woman."



A Bag of Familiar Patterns.

"And those?"

"Well, medicine and the law, to begin with. As a doctor I have it on my conscience to have dissuaded at least three young women from becoming trained nurses."

The silence that follows this statement becomes fairly ominous.

"I have no patience" begins Miss Lane at last, "with a man—no respect for one—who says such a thing as that. I am sorry—I—really thought better of you." She rises to her full height, which is not a great one, but gives her unfair advantage over her prone combatant, who sits up physically and metaphorically.

"I am awfully sorry," apologetically, picking up a fallen hatpin; "I didn't mean to hurt your feelings. I couldn't tell I was treading on sacred ground. Somehow one doesn't associate you with any of those pursuits. You are so—"

"So feminine," she interjects scornfully, "but I can't help that."

"No, thank heaven," devoutly.

A gleam of mirth steals into her eyes, and she reseats herself.

"Oh, what is the use?" she cries. "I thought years ago I had learned to control myself. I know and love so many splendid women who are nurses, and my best friend," firmly, "is a doctor—a woman doctor. So it hurts me to the quick to hear your easy contempt for them."

"But you mustn't think for an instant that I feel a contempt for them. Besides I am only a man in a thousand."

"Yes," she says, with a catch of her breath, "it really doesn't matter what you think."

"Oh! but I hope it does—just a little. It matters so much to me. I have only known you a short month, but there are times when time doesn't count. Surely, you know I love you"——

Suddenly across his speech there breaks a child's cry of terror. Turning sharply he sees little Jack Hughes fall heavily from the high tree, where he has fixed the flag. Moved by a common impulse the man and girl go tearing down the hill together without a word. Miss Lane kneels by the boy and with her ear to his breast listens to the faint heart-beats that assure her life is still there.

"I'd give a good deal for my surgical bag just now," says Dr. Randall when the boy has been laid on his own bed in the cottage where Miss Lane's summer has been spent. "There's an ugly fracture here that needs looking to at once. Let me see," and he glances about to discover some impromptu means to wrest to his own ends.

Miss Lane stands irresolute for a brief moment, then is out of the room in a flash. When she appears it is with a bag of familiar pattern wherein is found all that is needed to the surgeon's hand.

"This," she says coloring, "I happened to know was in the house."

Miss Lane watches him approvingly in silence as long as all goes smoothly, but when a cry of agony breaks from the child. "Don't you think"—she says. "Just a whiff or two," he answers, with perfect comprehension, and in a few moments Jack is lulled off on the blessed fumes of ether.

When all is well over and they stand together on the porch outside Jack's little room in the falling twilight, Miss Lane somehow finds herself in Dr. Randall's arms.

"I am glad that man, proud man, never dissuaded you from becoming a trained nurse," he says. "Jack would have fared badly today if between us we hadn't surprised your secret."

"I have been a doctor for two years," says Miss Lane demurely. Then, after a pause, she adds with a little smile, "I was to have been one of the lights of orthopedic surgery."

"Was to have been?" he echoes, as he draws her closer to him. "Why, what happened?"

"You," she returns briefly. "I hope I know my own limitations."

A Novelty in Bridegrooms.

Seven Vienna ladies, weary of Europe and Western civilization, have married seven male members of a Bedouin troupe which has been performing in the Austrian capital during the summer and autumn. Five of these adventurous women are spinsters and two are widows, and they have just accompanied their Asiatic spouses to their native deserts and oases, where they are to be again married after the Arabic ceremony. The scene at the station when they took their farewell of "Felix Austria," says the Vienna Tagblatt, was truly astonishing. The platform was crowded with sympathetic friends, the majority of whom were women and girls, and not a few among them expressed their envy of their sisters who had won such magnificent husbands. All the seven brides, according to the ungallant reporter, "were of uncertain age," and, as they all had some property, he insinuates that the Arabs were not so much fascinated by their beauty and youth as by their gold and silver. The crowd of women left on the platform as the train steamed out burst into tears at the departure of the heroes of the circus.—London Daily News.

Engineer "Got the Old Lady."

The president of an Eastern railroad tells of an engineer of a fast freight train who called on him one day and asked him to prevent a deaf old woman from walking on the tracks along one section of that division. Several times the engineer had barely missed running over her, and he was terrified lest a fatal accident should happen to her. "The only way to prevent a deaf person from walking on the track," said Mr. Underwood, "would be to cut his legs off." "That is just what I will do for my deaf old lady if you cannot stop her," replied the engineer. Investigation showed that she was accustomed to go to a summer hotel to sell baskets and embroidery, and that the railroad afforded her a short cut to her destination. She was remonstrated with, but it did no good. "And, do you know," said Mr. Underwood, "she was finally run over. That very engineer called on me, with tears running down his cheeks, one day, and reported: 'I've got the old lady at last, sir.'"

Persia Has No Summer Rain.

There is no rain in Persia during the summer months, and the land is barren except where there are streams of water for irrigation. The mountain streams are conducted in an underground channels, formed by digging pits, about thirty feet apart, and tunneling from one to the other. This prevents the evaporation of the water by the sun, and at the same time usually finds a clay bottom so that there is not so much lost by absorption and leakage. Little channels branch off from time to time, and bring some of the water to the surface, where it is carried about in little ditches, to water the crops.

The Burr and Hamilton Families.

Mrs. Elizabeth Burr Hamilton, said to be the last member of the seventh generation of the Burr family, who died at Bridgeport, Conn., at the age of 90, was the fifth cousin of Aaron Burr, the third vice president of the United States, who killed Alexander Hamilton, the lawyer and statesman, in a duel in 1804. Her death recalls the fact that, though the families of Burr and Hamilton were the most bitter enemies at the beginning of the last century, love found a way 32 years after the famous duel to bring the families together again by the marriage of Elizabeth Burr and Alexander Hamilton in 1836.

Anti-Tuberculosis Dispensaries.

The first of the anti-tuberculosis dispensaries in Paris was inaugurated in the Rue Mercadet, in the Montmartre district, last week. The object of the work is more preventive than curative. Poor people are examined free of charge. If tuberculosis is found, the proper initial treatment and advice are given to them. This institution is due principally to private initiative.

IN THE WEB OF A SPIDER.............

BY....... LILLIAN GILLIN.

CHAPTER XXXVII—(Continued.)

And she swept along the broad halls and down the broad stairway, he following, half-stupefied, half-fearful that yet, in the moment of his victory, it might be snatched from him.

A vision of loveliness, she entered the room, where all had gathered, to await her coming.

"Oh, Beatrice!" whispered Cora, springing to her side. "Don't marry him, dear, don't! I once loved him, too —child as I am. But now—"

She shuddered as conclution to her sentence.

"Fear nothing, dear," whispered Beatrice in return.

And, wonderingly, Cora resumed her seat.

Only one was absent. Allen's place was vacant. As her eyes swept the little group, he entered and took his place among them.

The clergyman from the village church was also present in his robes.

Taking the hand of Beatrice in his, Randolph advanced into the room.

"Before the ceremony takes place," he said, "I wish to tell you all that I am about to be united with one who is inheritor alike to her father's name and fortune. The cruel mistake regarding her birth has been rectified, and our wedding trip is to the land where we may gather the proof of the statement which I have just made. Mists which have clouded her reason have cleared, and to-night she comes to me—my bride—my wife!"

The thrill of an irrepressible triumph was in his voice; his eyes dwelt upon the anticipated pride of possession, on her exquisite loveliness.

He made a movement toward the minister, when she checked him.

"One word!" she said. "You, as master of Grey Oaks, gave to your friends a surprise. Is it not fitting that I should do likewise? It is only to tell them that to obtain proof of which you just have spoken, our contemplated trip will not be necessary. My claim to my name and inheritance already is made good! I, Beatrice Markham, to-night am mistress of Grey Oaks, and the papers to prove it are already mine! Let him dare dispute it who will!"

"Beatrice?" pleaded Chester, "calm yourself! If this be true, it can in no way affect our present course. Remember, your lover's fate hangs on the next half hour!" he whispered, so that she alone might hear.

"My lover's fate!" she said, aloud. "Yes, you are right! All is ready for a wedding; is it not? It were fitting, then, that there should be no disappointment. There shall be none. What does a change in bridegrooms matter? Ah, Randolph Chester, you believe that I have, indeed, gone mad? Not so! Coward! Villain! Perjurer! To-night you shall take my rightful lover's place, as he shall step into yours—but yours in outward semblance only! Where I yield him honor, I yield you contempt! Where I give him my worship, I give you disdain! Where to him I proffer love, honor and all wifely obedience, to you I throw the scorn which you so fittingly deserve! Men, do your duty!"

As she uttered the last command, her voice rose higher.

The doors leading to the library were thrown open, and four officers of the law entered and stepped to Mr. Chester's side.

Behind them stood Tyrrell, and still behind them, alone and unfettered, Bertram Talbot.

With one glad cry of rapture, unheeding all the rest, Beatrice hastened toward him, felt his dear arms close about her, while her tired head rested on his breast.

Forked lightning flashed from Randolph Chester's eyes as he glanced from one to the other of those who had so lately been his guests.

"What does this farce mean?" he questioned, finding voice at last, but instinctively conscious, light as was the detaining grasp upon his sleeve, that it soon would tighten into force should he strive to break free from it.

"You wish to know what it means, Randolph Chester?" replied Bertram Talbot, while his arm held Beatrice more closely to him. "It means that you called checkmate too soon! It means that defeat, instead of victory, is the issue of your bitter war against honor and truth! It means that as you have dealt to others, so shall measure be meted out to you—perjurer and false witness! You shall stand in the box to which you condemned me. You shall occupy to-night the cell which I have left vacant! You shall wear the convict's garb with which you, so mercilessly, would have dishonored me!"

"You can prove nothing!" said Chester.

"We can prove all!" retorted Talbot, Must you see the papers to believe? Mr. Leyton, show them to him!"

Allen drew from his breast pocket a packet and slowly unfolded it. One paper was plainly marked as Donald Markham's will, with date affixed. The certificates, too, were easily scanned. Chester laughed, sardonically.

"All this proves nothing against me," he said. "I did not know that this was true."

"And this man's testimony—think you it will also prove nothing?" asked Talbot, and, pointing to Tyrrell, who, cowering behind the rest, had hitherto been unseen by his late master.

"So you've brought him, too?" answered Chester. "And the game is up, eh? Well, I made a good fight, and it was for the sake of a woman's face. Aye, Beatrice Markham, remember it always, when you revel in the calm even current such men as you call love, that you throw away the mad torrent worthier the name. Yes; you have won, and I have lost. A traitor has betrayed me! One day earlier, and the game would have been mine—one little day, that all eternity cannot restore, the eternity to which in this moment, I consign my wretched soul!"

As he spoke, with the swiftness of thought he wrenched one arm free from the grasp of the man who held it, and drew from his breast pocket the tiny pistol with which he had threatened Talbot that morning in the cell, and held it against his temple; but ere he could pull the trigger Layton had seized his hand. He was overpowered, and they wrested it from his nerveless hand.

"You must come with us, Mr. Chester," said one of the men.

But Beatrice, lifting her head from its shelter, advanced to their side.

"No," she answered. "He has sinned only against me and the man I love. He can do us no further harm. His conscience shall be his sole accuser and sole judge in one. There can be no charge if we prefer none. Let him go free!"

"Beatrice?" pleaded Bertie, with a glance of pleading love.

She silenced him.

"It is my wish," she said, "and our noblest revenge. It is Christmas night, dear. Don't let us forget that."

An hour later, and in the gloomy solitude of his own rooms, the false and perjured master of Grey Oaks sat alone. Though he had not been present at the ceremony, he knew that already the sacred vows had been spoken which had made Bertram Talbot and Beatrice Markham one—knew that, except to destroy human life, he could harm neither more.

Black as the night was his own soul, which his surging passions tossed to and fro upon the rocks where it had met its shipwreck.

Suddenly a knock sounded low on his door. He rose and opened it. To his surprise, Edith Lorrimer stood before him.

"Our schemes have failed," she said, in a low, earnest, thrilling whisper. "You have lost the woman and I the man we love. Take me away with you —anywhere, anywhere, so that I may never see their faces more."

"You mean to go with me as my wife?"

"Yes, if you will have it so. We are fitted only for one another."

"So be it," he replied.

And thus the loveless contract was sealed between them. The morning discovered both missing.

For Allen she had left only these few hurried words:

"I give you back your freedom as my best Christmas gift."

"She has resigned my fortune," he said to himself, and guessed not yet the mad love which had made such pitiful ruin of its own hopes.

But here was no more for him to do at Grey Oaks. Together with his mother and sister, he bade it adieu.

"Promise that you will return in the summer?" pleaded Beatrice. "Promise that you will let us welcome you then?"

He smiled sadly.

"For mother and for Cora I will promise you," he answered; "but for myself"—his voice sank to a whisper—"I dare not come!" he said.

And something in his tone, rather than in the words themselves, silenced her further.

In the evening's gloaming of another day she and Bertie, alone at Grey Oaks, stood silently beside one of the windows of the room which had been to them so memorable. Her head was on his heart, his arm about her slender waist. Each had listened to all that had happened to the other during these long and weary months of suffering.

"Poor little fly!" he said, after a few minutes' silence. "He boasted truly. Another day and your fluttering wings would have been beyond our rescue!"

She shuddered and lifted up her lips for his caress. Thus she might banish thought and memory. The sweetness of the present wiped out the cruel past. Her happiness was worth the price paid for its possession.

Alone in the lodge sat Tyrrell, but he gazed only into the fire, and the steaming jug, for once, was absent.

"I can't understand it," he muttered to himself. "It's all as peaceful as a May morning, and the staring eyes are gone. I can slape and drame without their disturbing me. But Miss Beatrice is safe—thank God! and Tyrrell O'Byrne helped to make her so. Thank God, too, for that! Tyrrell O'Byrne she's promised to keep in her service so long as a drop of the cratur don't pass his lips; and shure he's taken the oath agin it for good. But shure and I wish it had been the other chap as she married."

And so, with one backward glance and Tyrrell's one regret, we leave them all—the spider and the would-be victims. The web he had so carefully woven is shattered. The prisoners so nearly fettered, freed. The spider—homeless, a wanderer, an unloved wife and an accusing conscience his companions forever more.

But Beatrice and Bertram frogot the revenge already wreaked, in their own happy lives, and in the consciousness that no more webs could sully their beautiful home, and that henceforth Grey Oaks may boast no mystery.

THE END.

Gerome the Great.

The career of Gerome, the famous French painter, has been one long triumph; early in life he made fame, very soon riches began to follow; for many years he has been probably the wealthiest artist in the world. He is old now, but none the less, he has still the lithe, active figure of a boy.

He has the artist's direct, searching gaze, but the brow and jaw of a soldier—of Kitchener, to speak in the terms of the day, or of Napoleon, whom he has made his hero and celebrated over and over again in picture and statue. He speaks most often with the terse force of a general at a critical moment of the battle, and makes violent gestures.

M. Gerome still lives in his palatial home near Montmatre, which was built twenty years ago.—Chicago News.

MONKEY A PRACTICAL JOKER.

Sim's Fun Cost His Owner Money and Bric-a-Brac.

There is today in Baltimore a family which is bemoaning the destruction of some valued chinaware and bric-a-brac, total value, $26.20, and there is a small simian of the ring-tail species with an abnormally developed sense of humor who is directly responsible for the mischief, yet who wonders daily at the sudden coolness which has sprung up between his master and himself. According to the story told by the aggrieved owner, he bought young simian as a pet for his children, and for a few weeks the relations between all parties were amicable. Then, as the spring drew nigh, the family moved to their country home, taking Sim with them. About a week ago the family came into town to spend Sunday, and then the question as to what disposition to make of the monkey during their absence came up. It was finally decided to tether him to his box in the kitchen, and leave him with enough food and water to last until their return. Monday morning the family arrived, and went to see how Sim had fared. It did not take them long to find out. The dining room looked like it had been the scene of a bull-fight. A sofa had all the stuffing pulled out of it and arranged in tasteful bunches about the room, china pitchers and plates lay smashed on the floor, and the small bronze clock on the mantel was upside down in the fireplace. Ruin greeted the explorers on every hand, but the greatest chaos was found in the kitchen. Sim had piled everything portable up in a heap in the center of the room, dusted the whole copiously with salt and flour, and after pouring a kettle of water on to finish the job, sat on top of the pile and greeted the master's family with squeaks of simian pride. It was later discovered that he had gnawed the string that kept him near his box, and had improved the shining hours not only in accomplishing the ruin told above, but a great deal more besides. As has been hinted, he is not in favor these days. He is bound with a chain, and a good monkey with a keen sense of and skill in practical joking is for sale.

WHEN SMOKING WAS A CRIME

Colonial Legislature Was Severe on the Users of Tobacco.

It is one of the curiosities of oldtime legislation that the use of tobacco was in early colonial days regarded as far more injurious, degrading, and sinful than intoxicating liquors. Both the use and the planting of the weed were forbidden, the cultivation of it being permitted only in small quantities, "for mere necessitie, for phisick, for preservation of the health, and that the same be taken privately by anncient men." But the "creature called tobacco" seemed to have an indestructible life. Landlords were ordered not to "suffer any tobacco to be taken into their houses" on penalty of a fine to the "victualler" and another to "the party that takes it." The laws were constantly altered and enforced, and still tobacco was grown and was smoked. No one could take it "publicquely" nor in his own house or anywhere else before strangers. Two men were forbidden to smoke together. No one could smoke within two miles of the meeting house on the Sabbath day. There were wicked backsliders who were caught smoking around the corner of the meeting house and others on the street, and they were fined and set in the stocks and in cages. Until within few years there were New England towns where tobacco smoking in the streets was prohibited, and innocent cigarette loving travelers were astonished at being requested to cease smoking. Mr. Drake wrote in 1886 that he knew men, then living, who had had to plead guilty or not guilty in a Boston police court for smoking in the streets of Boston. In Connecticut in early days a great indulgence was permitted to travelers—a man could smoke once during a journey of 10 miles.

The Bad Man as a Hero.

Homer sang the ruffian Achilles into thirty centuries of renown. The deeds of many frontiersmen excel the Greek's. David did his own singing, and came out with a great reputation. Yet I doubt not the McKandals gang would have made Goliath look like an amateur. Ivanhoe, in his iron kettle with his long lance killing the neighbors for love of God and lady, never surpassed in courage and sacrifice Wild Bill and his comrades. But the dime novelist has been their biographer, and cheap notoriety is their reward. They deserve a statelier history and a sweeter requiem. With all their faults they were brave and gallant gentlemen, who made it possible for quiet men to bring decent women and establish American homes on the plains and in the mountains. Wild Bill Hickok's adventurous career should have come to the knowledge of that fine old Scotchman, who delighted in the blare of bugles, the clash of arms, the tale of chivalry. Walter Scott would have made this great scout and peace officer a hero of romance and a prince of the border.E. C. Little in Everybody's Magazine.

Horse Famine in Kansas.

Central Kansas is complaining of a horse famine. The farmers have been too ready to sell their horses to English army purchasing agents, and now the farmers are compelled to pay from $125 to $140 for animals that a year and a half ago found no purchasers at $75.

"And she actually fell in love with the first baseman. Why?" "I really couldn't say. He certainly didn't seem a good catch."

OPEN TO SETTLERS

LAND CEDED BY INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA AT DISPOSAL OF THE PUBLIC.

PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT

On Aug. 6 the Lands Will Be Thrown Open to Settlement Under the Homestead and Townsite Laws—Must Qualify for Entry by Previous Registration—No Chance for Sooners.

Washington, July 9.—The proclamation of President McKinley opening to settlement the land ceded by Indians in the Territory of Oklahoma was given to the public yesterday. The proclamation covers the cession made by the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in accordance with the act of March 2, 1895, and those made by the Comanche, Kiowa and Apache tribes in pursuance of the act of June 6, 1900. The proclamation provides for the opening of the lands in those reservations which are not reserved at 9 o'clock a. m., on the 6th day of August next, the lands to be open to settlement under the homestead and townsite laws of the United States.

The proclamation says that beginning on the 10th inst. and ending on the 26th, those who wish to make entry of land under the homestead law shall be registered. The registration will take place at the land offices at Reno and Lawton. The registration at each office will be for both land districts. To obtain registration the applicant will be required to show himself duly qualified of these lands under existing laws and to give the registering officers such appropriate matters of description and identity as will protect the applicant and the government against any attempted impersonation. Registration cannot be effected through the United States mails or the employment of an agent excepting that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors may present their applications through an agent, no agent being allowed to represent more than one soldier. No person will be allowed to register more than once. After being registered applicants will be given certificates, allowing them to go upon the ceded lands and examine them in order to aid them in making an intelligent selection.

It is explicitly stated that "no one will be permitted to make settlement upon any of the lands in advance of the opening provided for," and the statement is made "that for the first sixty days following said opening no one but registered applicants will be permitted to make homestead settlement upon any of said lands, and then only in pursuance of a homestead entry duly allowed by the local land officers or of a soldier's declaratory statement duly accepted by such officers."

Injunction Will Be Asked.

Oklahoma City, Okla., July 9.—An injunction suit will be brought before Judge Irwin at El Reno in a few days for an order restraining the register of the land office here, the receiver, the surveyors and all other persons from proceeding with the opening of the lands of the Kiowas, Comanche and Apache Indians according to the proclamation of the president and the act of congress under which he proceeded. The suit will be brought by C. Porter Johnson of this city, who has been engaged by Judge William M. Springer to act as the attorney for the Indians who are affected by the opening of the lands. The bill of particulars for the injunction will contend that the lands of the Indians are being illegally and unconstitutionally wrested from them against their wishes.

Cold-Blooded Deed Witnessed by Pedestrians.

Then he shot himself. Dozens of pedestrians on Park avenue, opposite the house where the Luthys lived, saw the woman killed and saw her body fall from one landing of the fire escape to the one below. It is thought Luthy contemplated the deed, for he sent the children from their home. Jealousy and a quarrel growing out of a delayed dinner is supposed to have been the cause of the tragedy. Luthy is in a hospital, and though the self-inflicted wound is serious it may not prove fatal. He says his wife tried to shoot him first.

BANDITS ARE FOXY

LITTLE HOPE OF OVERTAKING MEN WHO ROBBED THE GREAT NORTHERN.

HAVE ELUDED THEIR PURSUERS

Believed to Be Headed for the "Hole in the Wall" Country, the Most Notorious Refuge of Criminals in the United States, or Hidden in the Intricacies of the Bad Lands.

Anaconda, Mont., July 9. — Special dispatches from a staff correspondent of the Anaconda Standard on the ground are to the effect that there is now little hope of the sheriff's posse overtaking the men who held up the Great Northern express train at Wagner, Mont., last Wednesday. The correspondent has just returned from the section of country where the posses were expected to overtake the robbers. His account is that the pursuers have been outwitted and that the robbers have outwitted them.

There are now two theories presented. One is that the outlaws, who are far better mounted than their pursuers, have already crossed the Missouri river and are well on their way toward the "Hole in the Wall" country in Wyoming, the most notorious refuge of criminals in the United States. The "Hole in the Wall" is a fastness practically impregnable, and capable of being successfully defended by a few men almost Against Any Force.

The region between the point in the Missouri brakes and the "Hole in the Wall" is very sparsely settled, a few scattered cattle ranches being the only evidences of human habitation. Pursuit over this wild section, according to old plainsmen, is virtually hopeless.

The other theory is that the robbers have gained the intricacies of the Bad Lands along the Missouri river near the Little Rockies and are there awaiting the time when the chase shall have grown cold and then seize a favorable opportunity to ford the river at a place where crossing could not be effected by men unfamiliar with the river and its treacherous windings. Every foot of ground is an open book to the robbers, who have used the vicinity as their stamping grounds for years. The officers are still in the field, but it is the opinion of those who are on the ground that the scene of active pursuit must now be transferred to the Yellowstone, Custer or Dawson counties, through one or more of which the robbers must pass to reach the "Hole in the Wall."

CONSTITUTION WINS.

Columbia and Independence Easily Distanced.

Newport, R. I., July 9.—An unqualified victory for the Constitution; an overwhelming defeat for the Independence; a most commendable showing for the old champion—the Columbia—is the record of the first day's contest of the big sloops in the Newport Yacht Racing association's series. From the firing of the starting gun, which sent the yachts off to windward in a light easterly breeze, the Constitution held her rivals. At the turning buoy she was little more than two minutes in advance of the Columbia, while the Independence was hull down to leeward. Berlin, July 9. — Prince Hohenlohe, formerly chancellor of Germany, died at Ragatz, where he has been for some time taking the waters with the hope of benefiting his health. Chlowig Carl Victor, prince of Hohenlohe and Cchillingsfurst, was born at Rothenburg March 31, 1819. He was the second son of Francis Joseph, of the line of Walkenburg. In 1845, on the death of his brother Philip Ernest, Chlowig succeeded, with the consent of his elder brother, to the old family seat of Schillingsfurst, and, forsaking the Prussian service, took up his permanent residence in Bavaria. Prince von Hohenlohe's death was generally unexpected here, as he left Berlin several weeks ago apparently in good health, although his increasing weakness was evident. The prince arrived at Ragatz extremely exhausted. His death is attributed to the weakness of old age.

INHUMAN ATROCITIES

Charged Against the Boers by a Newspaper Correspondent.

London, July 9—The Daily Mail gives sensational prominence this morning to mail advices from Vlakfontein which attribute to the Boers inhuman atrocities that the censor would not allow to be described by cable. "A couple of Boers," says the Mail's correspondent, "who were armed with Martinis, walked around among the dead and dying, some they turned over to see if they were dead. If it were otherwise then one or the other of the Boers shot them as you would shoot an ox. I saw four killed in this way. One youngster pleaded for his life. I heard him say: 'Oh, Christ, don't,' and then bang went the rifle. That is what happened." The Daily Mail protests vigorously against the suppression by the censor of such details.

WON BY CORNELL

ALL RECORDS BROKEN IN THE GREAT INTERCOLLEGIATE BOAT RACE.

WISCONSIN COMES IN THIRD

'Varsity Race Was One of the Fiercest Struggles Ever Witnessed in College Aquatics—Accident Prevents Cornell Walking Off With Three Victories—Pennsylvania Freshmen Win.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., July 4.—The intercollegiate boat races over the Hudson river course were decided yesterday as follows:

'Varsity Eight—Cornell first; time, 18:55 1-5. Columbia second; time, 18:58. Wisconsin third; time, 19:06 4-5. Georgetown fourth; time, 19:21.

The best previous record for 'varsity eights was 19:44 3-5. No time was taken for Syracuse and Pennsylvania, who were many lengths behind.

In the 'varsity fours Cornell was first; time, 11:39 3-5. Pennsylvania second; time, 11:24 2-5. Columbia third; time, 11:51 3-5. The best previous record for this distance was 10:31 1-5.

In the freshman race Pennsylvania was first; time, 10:20 1-5. Cornell second; time, 10:23. Columbia third; time, 10:36 1-5. Syracuse fourth; time, 10:44. The previous record for freshmen eights for this distance was 9:19 1-2.

Not only was a new record for 'varsity eights made, but it is more remarkable that the four leading crews in the race each broke the old record by many seconds. The race was rowed in water that was phenomenally advantageous, and while this may have helped the time, still it did not seem to assist the freshmen who rowed under almost the same conditions. The 'varsity race was the most exciting of the day, although the other two, with much caused a flurry. The fact that Pennsylvania had been picked as a sure winner of the four-oared event, but that Cornell beat her out easily, whetted the appetite of the thousands upon the shore and observation train for the other contests. The phenomenal feature of the races is that had not the Cornell freshmen boat broken in the last half-mile, Cornell would have three victories to her credit. Columbia is happy for her oarsmen have gone up from a very bad place to a second place in a six-sided contest after giving the winners a hard fight.

Georgetown, a new rival for honors, and to whom little attention had been paid, got inside the time record and hung on to the leaders with a tenacity that surprised everybody. Pennsylvania was never in the race with its second crew and Syracuse with its light oarsmen was outclassed.

The 'varsity race was one of the fiercest struggles ever witnessed in college aquatics, and had any one of the crews in the lead displayed any weakness the tailenders were ready to take their place and make good time at that. As it was, although the race was one of the most severe ever rowed, there was not a sign of distress in any boat.

FIELDS LAID BARE

GRASSHOPPERS DOING GREAT DAMAGE IN THE RED RIVER VALLEY.

SUMMER FALLOWING RESPONSIBLE

Clay County Suffers Most and Whole Communities Are Out Fighting the Pest—Hopperdozers Do Good Work—Western Minnesota Will Never Be Rid of Them Until Fallowing Is Abandoned.

St. Paul, July 7.—The Rocky mountain and White mountain locusts have been doing considerable damage in the Red river valley from Wilkin to Kittson counties. Continued rain and a parasite which attaches itself to the grasshopper have somewhat mitigated the pest, but have not prevented them from cleaning up whole acres of young wheat, flax and potatoes, whose fields are bare. About Moorhead and Ada the grasshoppers are present in numbers sufficient to do great damage under favorable conditions.

Oil for use in hopperdozers has been furnished farmers at various points in Kittson, Marshall, Polk, Norman, Otter Tail, clay and Wilkin counties. In Clay county, where the grasshoppers are most serious, the whole community is fighting them and hundreds of bushels have been caught in hopperdozers. This is the most general outbreak of hoppers in Minnesota in many years and the crops will be in peril until the stubble fields from this year's crops are plowed up.

Prof. E. B. Forbes, acting state entomologist, has embodied his investigation in that region in a bulletin published by the state experimental station.

The best and simplest method of fighting the locusts is to plow the eggs under. This inverts the egg mass and the young find themselves too far under ground to dig out. As no mature grasshoppers live through the winter and there is but one brood a season this method effectually disposes of them. Next to plowing under the best means is the hopperdozer. The state furnishes oil for use in the hopperdozers. County commissioners distribute the oil.

The whole source of the trouble, according to Prof. Forbes, lies in the common practice of summer fallowing, and Western Minnesota will never be free from grasshoppers until the farmers abandon it. The land left fallow becomes the breeding place of millions of grasshoppers.

On his way to the penitentiary in charge of Sheriff Furey Stine jumped from a car window while the train was going about forty miles an hour and tried to escape. He escaped injury by the jump, but the train was stopped and the sheriff and a number of passengers chased the fugitive and recaptured him after a run of a mile.

Several men were experimenting with a gasoline lamp in a saloon on the lower floor of the lodging house when the lamp exploded, scattering flames in all directions. The building was wooden, and before the fire department arrived the flames had eaten through the lower floor and were spreading to the upper stories. The lodging house contained about a hundred guests who were unable to save anything except what they wore. Most of them escaped by jumping from the first and third-story windows, and it is miraculous that not more were killed.

Minnesota granite will be used. The total of the contract is $190,101.66. The commissioners asked for bids on all kinds of stone, and each of the bidders not only submitted figures upon granite but upon other stones and upon combinations of various kinds of material. One month ago bids were called for and the material was restricted to Minnesota stone. The offers were so high that all the bids were rejected and new ones were called for.

Yankton, S. D., July 4. — Asa Gardner discovered hog thieves on his way home to Bon Homme early yesterday morning. He had been in town for the Beach & Bower's show and at 3 a. m. was passing the farm of Peter Byrnes near Bon Homme when he noticed a wagon being loaded with hogs. Thinking it an unusual proceeding at that hour he investigated and found five fat hogs loaded up but no men in sight. He woke up the owner, and with him arrived in town at 6:20 a. m. and secured the assistance of the sheriff. Great efforts are being made to trace the thieves.

Farr, the logging superintendent of Indian reservations who made discoveries of alleged illegal timber cutting at Leech Lake and White Earth reservations in Minnesota, was in Milwaukee yesterday en route to a Northern Wisconsin reservation. Heroic efforts have been made in the past to suppress Farr, but he has refused to keep still, insisting from the start at White Earth that he was investigating the matter with the honest intention of reporting his discoveries to the government, no matter who was hit. He is not ready to tell his story to the public.

Stone, president of the old First National bank, involving the legality of his management of the affairs of that institution, which was forced to the wall in 1896. It is charged T. J. Corn is standing strong and well advanced and promises a big yield.

TALFT IS SALUTED

INAUGURATION OF THE NEW CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINES.

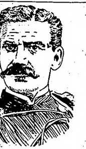
CEREMONY IS VERY AUSPICIOUS

Oath of Office Administered by Chief Justice Arellano in Public View—Gov. Taft Makes an Important Announcement as to Additions to the Commission—Governor's Address.

Manila, July 6.—Civil government in the Philippines has been auspiciously inaugurated.

Commissioner Taft was escorted by Gen. MacArthur and Gen. Chaffee from the palace to a great temporary tribune just outside the Plaza Palacio. Standing on a projecting center of the tribune, Mr. William H. Taft, the new civil governor of the Philippines, took the oath of office, administered by Chief Justice Arellano. Gov. Taft was then introduced by Gen. MacArthur, the guns of Fort Santiago being fired by way of a salute.

A feature of the inaugural address of Gov. Taft was the announcement that on Sept. 1, 1901, the commission would be increased by the appointment of three native members, Dr. Wardo Detavera, Denito Legarda and Jose Luzuriaga.



Maj. Gen. A. R. Chaffee, New Head of the American Army in the Philippines.

Insurrection Still Exists.

Of the twenty-seven provinces organized Civil Governor Taft said the insurrection still exists in five. This will cause the continuance of the military government in these sections. Sixteen additional provinces are reported without insurrections, but as yet they have not been organized. Four provinces are not ready for civil government. The speaker predicted that with the concentration of troops into larger garrisons it would be necessary for the people to assist the police in the preservation of order.

In connection with educational efforts Gov. Taft said that adults should be educated by an observation of American methods. He said that there was a reasonable would provide a tariff suitable, one that would assist in the development of the Philippines instead of an application of the United States tariff. According to the civil governor there is an unexpended balance in the insular treasury of $3,700,000 and an annual income of $10,000,000. He said that any possible friction between civil and military subordinates should be discouraged. The patriotism of the leading Filipinos was commended. In conclusion, Gov. Taft reiterated a hope expressed by the president that in the future the inhabitants would be grateful for the American Philippines victories, and that they would be indissolubly linked in ties of affection with the United States.

LIGHTNING'S FATAL BOLT.

Three Killed, One Paralyzed and Another Fatally Injured.

Pittsburg, July 6. — George McWilliams and family while enjoying an outing yesterday near Monessen, on the Monongahela river, took refuge from the terrific storm under a large oak tree. A bolt of lightning struck the tree and prostrated the entire party. When a relief party reached the scene two girls, Esther and Elizabeth, aged six and eight, were dead and an infant lived but a short time afterward. Mr. McWilliams was found to be totally paralyzed and his wife in such a condition that she cannot live. A ten-year-old son was severely injured but may recover.

OFF FOR CANTON.

President and Mrs. McKinley Go to Their Old Home.

Washington, July 7.—President and Mrs. McKinley left Washington last night for the home at Canton, where they are to spend the remainder of the heated term, except that the former may visit the Buffalo exposition and run on to Washington for a few days. They were accompanied by Secretary Cortelyou, Dr. P. M. Rixey, several clerical attaches of the White House and servants. Mrs. McKinley, as she boarded the train, showed unmistakable evidences of her recent severe illness in the thinness and pallor of her face, but she moved with alacrity from the carriage, boarded the train without any material assistance and appeared to be in a contented and cheerful state of mind. Occasional visits at intervals of several weeks will be made by the president to the capital to dispose of any accumulated business demanding his attention.

CALM NOW PREVAILS.

Striking Miners at Telluride, Col., Are Behaving Themselves.

Denver, July 7. — A calm prevailed yesterday over the scene of Wednesday's trouble with the striking miners employed in the Smuggler-Union mine near Telluride, Colo. The latest information concerning the situation came to Gov. Orman last evening from Sheriff Dowtain and was contained in a telegram which read as follows:

"There has been no violence or property destroyed since the 3d. I do not think I can protect life and property in case of riot. It is usually done before one knows it."

Gov. Orman was very much relieved by the receipt of the above message, for he feared that there might be an outbreak before his commission could arrive at Telluride and take the matter in hand.

STILL NO RELIEF.

Heavy Storms Alone Can Put Stop to Hot Weather.

Washington, July 7.—The tenth day of the present heated term was again a "scorcher" except where thunderstorms, local rains or violent atmospheric changes brough cool weather. In Arkansas, the East Gulf states, Northern Ohio and New York, thunderstorms brought relief. In Southeastern New England also cooler weather prevailed, the temperature falling from 6 to 10 degrees. The bureau officials again say the only prospect for relief from the heat lies in the occurrence of storms. There is no promise, they say, of general thunderstorms sufficient to make a considerable fall in the temperature. Local rains will give temporary local relief but the officials say permanent relief will not come until heavy storms or local rains prevail. In Chicago a promise of a short respite from the heat is given. New York, yesterday had a two-inch downpour of rain which sent the thermometer down to 76.

HONORED IN DEATH.

Pingree's Remains Viewed by Thousands.

Detroit, Mich., July 7.—All day until 11 o'clock last night the line of humanity which came to take a last look at the famous dead governor of Michigan continued unbroken. At times it extended two blocks back from the entrance to the city hall. From 6 until 11 last night the crowd was enormous. Three and four abreast, the line extended from the Michigan avenue entrance of the city hall five blocks distant. It was the great army of workers that had come to pay a last tribute to the man whom they regarded as their friend. When the doors were closed those who had been in attendance all day estimated that more than 50,000 people had passed by the bier of the dead governor. The remains were left in the corridors of the city hall over night under guard.

Disastrous Wreck.

Mosinee, Wis., July 7.—A disastrous wreck occurred on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway at this place resulting in the probable fatal injury of Henry Rhoda, a brakeman, and the utter destruction of five cars and the engine and tender. The wreck was caused by a heap of sand which was washed on the track during the heavy rains.

GOD KNOWETH BEST.

The world is as we find it,
Whether for good or ill,
The path is oft-times stony,
Leads oft-times up the hill;
But when we reach the summit,
And find there peace and rest,
We, then, forget the journey
And feel God knoweth best.

The world is as we take it,
Whether for ill or good:
The path lies through the brambles,
And often through the wood;
But if we look beyond it,
Where shines the light of day,
We'll bravely journey onward;
"God knoweth best"—we say.

The world is as we make it;
We reap both good and ill;
The seed we sow in passing,
Up-springs from wood and hill;
Before we reach the summit,
The flowers may be but weeds,
Unless we tread with gladness
God's path—He knows our needs.

How Love Came.

BY CHARLES W. LAMB.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

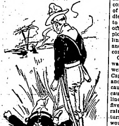
When Jimmy Marshall went back to the regiment after long leave, it was with a heavy heart and a sad spirit that caused him to look with a glad gaze to the war cloud hanging over Cuba.

Jimmy had come in from the regimental station to spend the first long leave since he had laid aside the academic gray with the mother and the old friends he had scarcely seen since his boyhood. For seven years he had worked hard and faithfully in the historic old regiment he had elected to join and now with his first lieutenant's bar on his shoulder, had come home again. There it was that he had renewed acquaintances of the old days and made new ones and it was one of these new ones that was sending him back to his regiment, sad and weary and welcoming war.

She, who was the cause of it all, was a newcomer to the old town, petite, blue-eyed and auburn-haired, and Jimmy had surrendered, hilt to front, before he even essayed to draw saber. He was her knight from the start and even the sainted mother was neglected in the short campaign that ended in his rout, for when he came to the fatal question, it was laughingly, heartlessly, but, oh, so emphatic, no. No hope, no future, no present, no past, only a winter of regret.

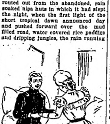
So scarcely two months later he was welcoming the hot sun, the fever, the thirst, the hunger, the bullets of Cuba and receiving honorable mention and recommendations for bravery in the affair at El Caney and for faithfulness in his care of the fever stricken men. Then it was the old post again, refitting, recruiting, whipping in the new men, packing and away across the westward ocean, and within the half year of his home leaving he was with the old company in the field against the little brown Tagals of Luzon; still with disappointment rankling in his heart and driving him into the excitement of the war with a fevered energy.

Jimmy had gone through his four years of cadethood without a single love affair and as a consequence had won and still wore the class sobriquet of the "Bachelor." His seven years of army life had not produced any better results to the credit of the anti-martial god who is believed to be especially fatal to martial heroes, and while there had been many charming women and many pretty girls in whose society he had found much to please him, he had, until that fatal long leave, found none to take his serious thought. So now he marched through the jungles and cane brakes of the far off Philippines with but one thought in his mind, and that a painful thought he was trying to drown in hard, active service, service that had already brought him recommendations like those spread upon the records of El Caney.



The Kindly Old Captain.

There came a day when the old company went wading over the rice paddies and through the jungles, one of those murky, wet days of the rainy season, just such a day as had seen the Filipino bullet strike brave, big-hearted Lawton. The company had routed out from the abandoned, rain soaked nipa huts in which it had slept the night, when the first light of the short tropical dawn announced day and pushed forward over the mud filled road, water covered rice paddies and dripping jungles, the rain running off the battered, gray slouch hats and soaking through the equally battered blue shirts and the mud squashing into and out of the shoes as it dragged along, only the disciplined formation and the business looking Krags distinguishing them from a mob of country tramps and marking them for an army.



"Elizabeth!"

Slowly the wet, tropical day wore on. Noon, mid-afternoon passed and then, as the tired men saw that the short twilight was coming down upon them, they saw one of the scouts running back. There was signalling back and forth. The captain's hand went up in the well known signal to halt. The foremost men stopped in their tracks, the rear crowding up upon them, and all began to fondle their Krags and to wipe the wet from the locks with their shirt sleeves. Then came a short, sharp command from the captain, a veteran of civil and Indian wars, and the huddled, bedraggled mass turned itself into a well ordered column of fours. Another order and the column was deployed into fighting line, a long thin line of enthusiastic skirmishers ready and eager for the fight. Wet, mud, discomfort were forgotten. It was a fight.

Over the fields, here in foot deep water, here in almost as much mud went the company, gray-haired old Captain Lyon directing the movements and Jimmy Marshall encouraging and cautioning the men who needed only cautioning. Then suddenly from the line of earth works barely discernable five hundred yards ahead through the rain, there came volley upon volley turning into a steady roar, a fire that would have been withering had marksmen held the guns. Four hundred and fifty yards, four hundred, three hundred and fifty, three hundred, then the tall corporal off to the right went down without a sound save the splash of the water he fell into. Then at a word from his chief, Jimmy lead off to the left with a dozen men and struck through the cane brake to out flank the works. And now the Krags were singing a merry song. Around to the left, the enemy's right flank went Jimmy, and with a yell broke cover and swept into the open end of the works sending their bullets crashing enfilading into the little brown fellows. In a moment all was confusion. Then there was a rush and the trenches were empty. And then looking back over the field, Jimmy saw what he had taken to be a number of wounded Tagals rise from the slight trench in which they lay and pour shot after shot into the body of a wounded soldier and that of his bunkie who was dressing his wound. Then he saw the captain dash to the rescue and calling to his men he ran forward to the scene and routed the outfit. And as he looked about him when it was over, at his feet he saw the body of the kindly old captain who had been father and brother as well as captain to him since he first had cast his lot with the old regiment.

Four days afterward Jimmy, with a few of the men of the company, was back in Manila with what was left of the old captain they had all loved so well and it fell to Jimmy's lot to tell of that captain's last moments and tragic death to his wife and daughter.

And at last Jimmy had ceased to think of that long leave at home. All through the preparations for the Cuban campaign he had thought only of the bitterness of his woe; all through the days and nights of sun and rain and battle and fever; all through the hurry and rush to the new, distant front; all through the seemingly endless chase through the brakes and paddies of Luzon after the elusive little brown men, that had been before him, and his comrades, remembering his former cheeriness, had commented: "What a change field work makes in Jimmy." But now with his devoted captain lying in his soldier's grave, with his captain's wife and daughter left to his care, the old trouble faded out and he thought only of the friend that he had lost and the charge that was his, for the captain had placed his affairs in Marshall's hands in the event of his meeting a soldier's fate, as Marshall had placed his in the captain's.

And so it came that after the soldiers and the family had paid their last tribute to the dead, the last volley had been fired over the grave, taps had floated out upon the warm still air and died away that the evening had closed down upon the quaint old city, Jimmy sat in the flag draped little parlor of the Lyon's quarters, listening to the patter and drip of the everlasting rain. The dim lamps cast an uncertain light over the room, the air was still and heavy and his thoughts were sad, but as he looked into the sad, tired face of the young girl sitting there so near to him and saw the luster of the dark hair, the fairness of the sweet young face and the sadness yet the brightness in the large dark eyes, he felt all the past go from him and his strong manly love go out to her, whom he had watched grow from the short frocked school girl to the comely young woman; felt it was her he had loved from the first. After drawing his chair over to hers he took her hand in both of his and in the silence of the little room, in the silence of his love, looked into her eyes, eyes in which the joy of womanly love burned through the sadness of filial grief, and the one word "Elizabeth" told his old sweet tale.

A New Geyser Born.

James King, the winter keeper of the Fountain Hotel, Yellowstone Park, was aroused a short time since by an explosion like that of the blowing up of a powder magazine. The ground shook and trembled, and the household goods rattled. He jumped from his bed and rushed to the window to escape, as he thought, the ruins of the building in an earthquake. It was 5 o'clock in the morning, and about half a mile away he saw a column of hot water and steam ascending high into the air, which in the crisp atmosphere presented a spectacle of prismatic beauty. He then realized that mother earth had given birth to a new geyser. The infant is reported to be the greatest of the hot-water geysers of the Park. It is located in the lower geyser basin, forty miles south from Mammoth Hot Springs.

Women to Start a Paper.

London is to have a newspaper modeled on La Fronde, the French daily, which evolved entirely from feminine minds. So dissatisfied are the women who belong to the 385 hockey clubs in Great Britain and Ireland with the meager reports they get in one hockey weekly paper at present in existence that they have resolved on starting a hockey paper of their own, written and and edited by women, for women, and devoted to their interests alone. It is pointed out by the ladies at the head of the movement that the men, who have only 80 clubs among them, get almost all the space at present in the paper, and only a miserable half-page is given to women. The new paper will start next October with the new season. Miss Thompson, an ardent, skilled hockey player, will be the editress.

Monument to a Pig.

No stranger monument ever existed than that which was erected at the Hotel de Ville by the inhabitants of Luneburg, in Hanover, in honor of a pig. This, which took the form of a kind of mausoleum, contained a large glass case in which was hermetically inclosed a fine ham cut from the animal, whose memory was to be handed down to posterity. Above was a handsome slab of black marble, on which, engraved in letters of gold, was the following inscription in Latin: "Passers-by contemplate here the mortal remains of the pig which acquired for itself imperishable glory by the discovery of the salt springs of Luneburg.

Dairy Notes.

Similar facts can be brought out in almost any native herd of cows in this country—that is a herd that has not been selected with the idea of getting only good milk and butter producers. The ordinary herd is picked up here and there without much reference to ancestry. Their capacities are judged of by the amount of milk they give when fresh, and this standard often proves a very unreliable one. The writer has known cows to give extraordinary yields a few weeks after calving, only to dry up in six months. Such cows were not profitable. Yet they were kept because they could at least be sold again to another farmer at the next time of calving. It is frequently said that if lightning would strike half of the cows in any one of our states, the dairy industry would be helped. It is a fact that a good many cows are kept that produce no revenue whatever. The testing of the cows would eliminate this factor, and only good cows would be the order of the day rather than the exception.

In this country the testing associations would soon develop into something more—that is, into associations that would also provide for the application to all of the herds of the tuberculin test. A sentiment would be created in favor of healthy cows, and it would become impossible to dispose of a cow at a sale unless she were positively known to be free from any of the contagious diseases, especially tuberculosis. At the present time the cost of applying tuberculin to a single cow is prohibitive. In the vicinity of Chicago a charge of $15 is made for the application of the test for tuberculosis. That is because the veterinarian must come a number of times to see the animal, often from considerable distance. Were large numbers to be given the treatment at the same time, the time element per cow would shrink to an insignificant amount. The cost per animal need not exceed $2 or $3, and could be made even less if all conditions were favorable. In fact, the only practical way of getting either the milk testing done or the tuberculin test applied is for the owners of cows to co-operate in the work and expense.

Mr. J. H. Monrad recently asserted that at the present time nothing is needed in dairy methods in this country more than the establishment of testing associations, such as have existed for the last six years in Denmark. The Farmers' Review has previously referred to these associations and has urged that the work be taken up here. Mr. Monrad says that the work in Denmark began in 1895, with 13 farmers. They formed the first Danish testing association. The men hired a young agricultural student at about $30 per month to go from herd to herd and make monthly tests. The work on the thirteen farms took his entire time. The cost to each farmer was only nominal. The results soon began to make themselves seen. The poor cows were weeded out and the good cows increased in number. The butter fat began to show a decreasing cost per pound. So successful was this first association that it was followed by another and another. After only six years there are in Denmark more than 200 of these associations, each taking the full time of a student in doing the testing work on the farms. More than this: The work has so grown that the associations have taken steps to combine under the supervision of the government. We agree with Mr. Monrad that this work should be taken up here. A score of farmers could be found in almost any locality devoted largely to dairying who would be willing to form an association to have the testing of their milk carried on systematically. Young men can be found that are capable of doing correct work with the Babcock tester, and men, too, that can be secured at a reasonable price. The cost to each farmer would probably not average more than $2 per month, a very small sum, when the value of the tests is considered. In one of the tests in Denmark, one cow was found making butter fat at a cost of 15 cents per pound and another at a cost of 78 cents per pound. Of course the cow that made butter fat at a cost of 78 cents per pound did not long continue in the business.

Poultry Briefs.

Dilapidated old shacks for poultry houses do not indicate success with poultry. A few may make a fair showing under such conditions, and aspire to nothing better. But to most men the dilapidated affair means non-interest in poultry. The best way to "repair" such buildings is to tear them down and build new ones.

The well-versed poultryman should not be too ready to give advice to amateurs that will enthuse them in the poultry business. Often novices rush into poultry keeping on a large scale and lose all they have, while if they had been held back and induced to go slow success might have crowned their efforts.

Houses and runs should be in proportion. It is seldom that the yards are large enough for the houses. In cities and villages it is no unusual sight to see a good-sized house and a run no larger than the house in the area covered. The result is a perfectly bare and often dusty ground plot. The area of the yard should be at least ten times that of the house in which the birds are kept, and if the yard is still larger it will not be of excessive size. In fact, it is best to have the area of the run so large that it will remain green through the entire growing season.

A writer on poultry subjects says: "Put 100, 200 or 300 eggs into an incubator, and after the second day you can notice the odor of what the stock that laid them have had access to. This is no fanciful idea, any careful operator has noticed this. Likewise such a fowl when boiling in the pot gives out the same unmistakable odor, and while the same can not be detected when cooking the egg the flavor can. A fowl with access to the manure pile or pig pen is not fit food for man, nor are the eggs." Doubtless there is more truth in the above than we generally believe. We are in the habit of looking upon our fowls as perfect strainers, thinking that we can feed them anything and that they will eliminate from the food all that is undesirable, even in smell. Scientists are coming to believe that only pure food should be fed our domestic animals at any time.

A successful poultry raiser says: "There is a class of enthusiastic novices who write to know if they can make a living at poultry-keeping. They might as well ask if they can make a living at bridge building. A living can be made at bridge building, by one who knows all about it, but for one, we would soon be in the poor house if we had to depend upon bridge building, as we would not know how to begin on a bridge. And one can make a living at the poultry business—if he knows how. No novice can do it, and we are frank to say so, but it will at least cost the novice less to begin and try to learn at the poultry business than in any other direction." It is rather strange that a man should expect to succeed in a business in which he has had no experience; yet we find new men every year rushing into poultry keeping, certain that they will succeed, though without a moment's experience in poultry-raising.

Live Stock News.

Reports from the Northwestern portions of the United States and from Canada indicate that there is a good demand from western ranches for stockers, at good prices. Many are being shipped from Canada and from points as far south as Texas. The western movement of pure bred bulls is also very noteworthy, and the expansion of the ranching interest is said to be greater this year than ever before.

The Billings Gazette reports that shearing in Wyoming is progressing nicely with but few delays. The clips in almost every instance have been a surprise to the flockmasters, in that they are much lighter this year than ever before. The wool is shorter, looser and cleaner than for years. One large clip is said to have fallen short of last year's weight over 25,000 pounds and the same number of sheep were sheared this year as last. Others will fall short from 5,000 to 15,000 pounds. The flockmasters of that section are of the opinion that the clips will be much lighter than last year.

The Rocky Mountain Husbandman says that while the owners of live stock, horses, cattle and sheep, have been very much frightened about the season, and not without reasons, the indications at this writing are that Montana is to have an exceptionally fine grass crop. The snowless winter and the dry spring, especially in the eastern part of the state, and the fact that a succession of snowless winters and dry seasons were followed by an exceedingly dry summer, created considerable alarm about the beginning of April. But the fact of general rains throughout the entire country, and some rain in the eastern portion of the state, with the opening of May, is rather reassuring, and it is scarcely probable now that the grass crop will be short. Had things been as favorable a month ago stock cattle would have ranged at least $2 per head higher than they now do, and much larger purchases of southern cattle would have been made.

Siberian Butter.

Speaking of the development of the Russian dairy industry the Boston Morning Herald says:

"We recently alluded to the new port which Russia is attempting to establish in the far north. This port is to be used for the shipment of agricultural products during the winter months. While the ports on the Baltic are open, however, a very large dairy business is carried on between Russia and Great Britain. Quite recently the Russian government entered into a contract with a commercial house at Riga, a port to the south of St. Petersburg, to establish a direct line of steamers to London. These are to be equipped with special refrigerating plants, and weekly trips will be made from Riga, largely with cargoes of butter. It is planned to collect this butter at the railroad stations on the Siberian railway, the train starting at Ob. Special fast freights made up of refrigerator cars will be run, each car carrying about eight tons of butter. On arriving at Riga the butter will be inspected, and, if it is thought necessary, repacked before being placed on the steamers. It is hoped that this fast freight and steamer service will build up business in other lines, but the principal article that it will depend on is butter, and the Russians hope to very largely supply the London market."

Some Lamb-Feeding Experiments.

The facts resulting from the lamb feeding experiment at the Wyoming Experiment Station are here reported in brief. The principal objects sought in the undertaking were to make a comparison of the feeding value of alfalfa with that of native hay and to determine the cost of feeding lambs for market under the conditions prevalent on the Laramie plains and in other parts of the state.

In December when the experiment was authorized good average lambs, such as were most desirable for the work, could not be secured and it was found necessary to select the one hundred made use of from a bunch of culls. After a week of preliminary feeding, the lambs were divided into two sets equal in number and as nearly so as possible in weight and quality. The experiment began December 28th, and continued for a period of ninety-five days, closing April 2. The two lots had a limited amount of corn and all the hay they would eat. The lambs were slaughtered and consumed in the home market. The butchers were highly pleased with the way they cut up and especially well satisfied with the demand for them. The meat was of excellent quality. The people of Laramie consider it the best mutton ever placed on sale in this market. The following is an extract from the summary:

	Native hay, lbs.	Alfalfa hay, lbs.
Food—
Hay eaten daily per head...	1.06	1.45
Grain eaten daily per head.	.80	.80
Total food consumed daily per head	1.86	2.25
Hay consumed for 100 lbs. gain	420	450
Grain consumed for 100 lbs. gain (corn and oil cake)..	317	243
Gains—
Average weight per head at the beginning of the experiment	48.2	47.1
Average weight per head at the close of the experiment	72.3	77.9
Average gain per head in 95 days	24.1	30.8
Average daily gain per head	.253	.324
Values—
Value of food eaten per 100 lbs. gain........................	$4.31	$3.76
Selling price	$4.65	$4.65
Profit per 100 lbs. gain on food consumed..............	.34	.89

It will be seen that the lambs fed alfalfa ate the more hay, made the larger gains and returned a higher profit. In the above calculations both kinds of hay were estimated at $6.00 per ton and corn at 90 cents per hundred pounds.

During the latter half of December good lambs for feeding were worth $4.50 to $5.00 per 100 pounds on the Chicago market. At these prices the market value of the lambs at the beginning of the experiment would not have exceeded $2.00 per head. Averaging both sets the feed eaten cost $1.13 per head. The selling price at $4.65 per hundred brought $3.38 per head, leaving the small net profit of 25 cents per head and this after allowing $6.00 per ton for all hay fed and 90 cents per hundred for the corn. In large quantities both hay and corn could have been purchased at considerable lower prices. Taking the results given above as a basis of calculation a farmer, by purchasing grain and feeding lambs, may secure a return of $11.05 per ton for alfalfa hay and $10.38 per ton for native hay.—Luther Foster.

Stockmen and Oleo Oil.

In 1899 there were slaughtered in this country 5,000,000 head of cattle. During the same year 24,000,000 pounds of oleo oil made from the fat of these cattle were used in oleomargarine made in the United States. At 9 cents per pound the oleo oil was worth $2,100,000. Divided among 5,000,000 head of cattle it amounts to 43 cents per head as oleo oil. Sold at half-price as tallow, for which there is unlimited demand, it is worth 21 1-2 cents per head. Wipe out oleomargarine altogether in this country and sell the fat as tallow (the Grout bill would only wipe out the illegally colored article at best) and it would mean a loss of but 21 1-2 cents per head on cattle worth on an average of about $50 per head. How absurd to think of stockmen feeling this infinitely small item!—C. Y. Knight.

From market centers it is reported that the storage of butter is going on rapidly, and that at the present time the amount in the cold storage plants east and west is fully up to that of previous years. Just what the relative amount will be it is very difficult to estimate, as a good many new men are going into the business of storing butter. Some of these men reside in the smaller cities and are storing their butter there. How deeply they will speculate remains to be found out by the actual fact. They will doubtless draw away from the larger cities much of the stock that has been going thither, or, rather, they will prevent the supplies from reaching the great market centers at all. This movement was inevitable. Hitherto, from the vicinity of the smaller cities, the butter has paid freight to the big cities, been stored there for months and then paid freight again back to the smaller cities to be consumed. This extra freight could but act as a factor in developing the storage idea in the smaller cities. The movement will further develop till innumerable small places will have their own storage plants. This will be helped by the increase of storage facilities for tubers and for fruits.

If there was ever a time when the farmer should be a student that time is now. The whole system of supply and demand is rapidly changing, and the man that does not study the new conditions is sure to be cast aside by the logic of events. He may indeed die before he feels the adverse influence very heavily, but death is the only escape for him.

He Wanted a "Roast."

The editor of a paper printed in a thriving town only a few miles from Iowa City was asked the other day to publish an article "roasting" a citizen.

"Certainly," he said to the caller. "What shall I say?"

He was furnished with an outline of what was wanted, and wrote an article that was a scorcher.

"That's splendid!" exclaimed the friend, delighted when the article was read to him. "That'll make his hair crinkle."

"All right," said the editor. "Let's see, what are your initials?"

"Good heavens!" said the citizen, "you aren't going to sign my name to that?"

"Why not?" asked the editor.

"I wouldn't have anyone know I had anything to do with that for the world. I can't afford to get into a scrap with my neighbors."

The editor, smiling benevolently, said:

"Why should I mix up in a scrap that does not concern me? Why should you expect me to assume the blame for publication of an article to which you are afraid to sign your name?"

The man stopped his subscription to the paper and went away mad.—Iowa City Republican.

UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME.

Notre Dame, Indiana.

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Notre Dame University, one of the great educational institutions of the West, which appears in another column of this paper. Those of our readers who may have occasion to look up a college for their sons during the coming year would do well to correspond with the president, who will send them a catalogue free of charge, as well as all particulars regarding terms, courses of studies, etc.

There is a thorough preparatory school in connection with the university, in which students of all grades will have every opportunity of preparing themselves for higher studies. The Commercial Course, intended for young men preparing for business, may be finished in one or two years according to the ability of the student. St. Edward's Hall, for boys under thirteen, is an unique department of the institution. The higher courses are thorough in every respect, and students will find every opportunity of perfecting themselves in any line of work they may choose to select. Thoroughness in class work, exactness in the care of students, and devotion to the best interests of all, are the distinguishing characteristics of Notre Dame University.

Fifty-seven years of active work in the cause of education have made this institution famous all over the country.

Better If He Had.

Coming home rather late one night, old Jones discovered a country yokel with a lantern standing by the kitchen door.

"Young man," said he, "what are you doing here?"

"I've come a-courting, sur."

"A-courting? What do you mean?"

"Well, I'm a follower of Mary, the kitchen maid, sur."

"Do you usually carry a lantern when you are on such errands?" asked the old man, sarcastically.

"Yes, sur, al'ays."

"Don't tell me such nonsense. You had better be off, quickly—courting with a lantern, indeed. In my young days I never used such a thing."

"No, sur," replied the yokel, sidling off; "judging by your missus, I shouldn't think yer did."—London King

To the Citizens of the Northwest:

You are invited to participate in a very important meeting, to be held in Fargo, July 16th, 17th and 18th. The object of this meeting is to take steps to induce congress to prevent the overflow of the Red river and the Red Lake river. United States government engineers have made a preliminary survey, and in their reports they say that the plan is not only feasible, but the expense is so small that, compared to the damage done in such a flood as in 1897, it is a mere bagatel. The estimated expense is only about $800,000, while the damage in 1897 was over $3,000,000.

I have letters from United States senators, members of congress, as well as members of the legislatures of the two Dakotas and Minnesota, as well as from other prominent men, who will attend the meetings and give addresses. All that is necessary is to let the government know what they want, and they will get it.

The railroads have agreed to give reduced rates from all points in Minnesota and the two Dakotas, and from West Superior, Wis., on the certificate plan. Buy your ticket at full fare going, taking a receipt from the selling agent, and when you buy your ticket to return you will get it for one-third of the regular fare. This offer is based on an attendance of not less than seventy-five, who have paid full fare going. Newspapers in Minnesota and the two Dakotas can do their subscribers no better service than to copy this, which they are respectfully requested to do. —J. A. Johnson.

WOMAN AND HOME.

GLASS BRIC-A-BRAC.

Glass, though proverbially brittle, will stand any amount of hard usage; but once it is broken the only thing that remains to be done is to throw it away. Cementing will not do much good. If the stem of a wine glass or vase is broken mending is sometimes possible by applying to the joints some easily fusible cement, such as shellac, through a silver tube.

Glass that has been properly annealed will stand variations of temperature perfectly well, but if this hasn't been done it is likely to break instantly and without apparent reason.

Frequently globes and chimneys fly to pieces when not properly heated. This is due to draught or moisture upon the chimney, especially lamp chimneys, which will crack from top to bottom, even after the lamp has been extinguished.

Glass vases used for flowers frequently become coated with an unpleasant deposit in the inaccessible parts of the inside. This is due to decayed stems of flowers that are left too long in the water. This deposit may be removed by cleaning with a cloth that has been dipped in pumice stone powder. Cane, if beaten flat with a hammer and dipped into the powder, makes an excellent brush and holds the pumice stone in position between the fibres.

Hydrochloric acid, one part acid to eight parts water, will remove any ordinary deposit. If this does not have the desired effect the quantity of acid may be increased. It is advisable to keep the hands out of the acid as much as possible, as it is injurious and often cracks the finger nails.

OUR LOVE FOR SWEETS.

Americans are a sugar-loving people, and our taste for sweets is increasing. We not only increase our consumption with the increase of population, but individually we consume more each year, says the Atlanta Journal. Last year we consumed 2,219,847 tons of sugar, which was 141,779 tons more than we ate the year before. This does not mean only that our sugar devouring population had increased, but it means that while each man, woman and child—if he got his or her proportion—consumed sixty-one pounds of sugar in 1899, he or she consumed a little more than 66½ pounds in 1900.

FOR THE AUGUST BRIDE.

The "something old" which Miss Vivian Sartoris, daughter of Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris, will wear on the day she marries Archibald Balfour, in London, in August, will be fine old point lace which belonged to her grandmother, Mrs. U. S. Grant, says the Chicago News. The wedding gown is simple, and its beauty is to be found in the simple lines and the beauty of the heavy ivory satin and the lace. The waist is simply cut, fitting the figure, and with a little fullness drawn in at the waist line in front. It has a high-cut neck and is fastened in the back finished with a box plait, which has the effect of being continued in the skirt, where a single box plait is carried down to the long train. The skirt is without trimming, and the waist is embroidered in the front and around the collar with pearls, the yoke being of mousseline outlined with pearl embroidery. A tapering effect is given to the waist by the lace, which is carried over the shoulders and slopes down in the waist back and front. It falls well over the tops of the sleeves and more of it is a full frill at the wrist of the gown. Miss Sartoris' trousseau contains many, charming but not over-elaborate gowns.

Japanese fret work in simple, conventional designs is used for many purposes in summer houses, on the walls of doorways, and to make cool looking cosey corners, says the New York Times. The Japanese carvings in wood are used for more elaborate summer houses as well as for city apartments. These carvings are wonderfully inexpensive, considering their beauty and the work in them. A deep piece which will fit into the top of a small doorway costs only $9. There is an interesting design of dragons in it in fine workmanship.

IS LETTER WRITING A BORE?

"I sometimes wish," said the woman, "that there was no such thing as letter writing. Maybe it was all right when it was still an art, but now it is all wrong. When a woman is happy she is usually too busy to write letters, but when the world is all awry, then she will sit down and relieve her mind by pouring out her feelings in ink and send the result to some member of her family or some confidential friend. It is all right, and I wouldn't begrudge any one the comfort found in writing the letter, but she should never send it. Usually the sorrow is of such short duration that by the time the letter has traveled to the other end of the route the woman is in capital spirits again. But the letter is doing its perfect work in making some one else miserable. When the comforting, sympathetic answer comes, the original perpetrator has to think for a moment before she can tell what it means."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

FATHERS ARE RESPONSIBLE

Should Help the Mothers to Train the Children.

"The influence of a good, manly, upright man is great on his young daughters, who look up to him with reverence, in leading them to noble aims and teaching them to avoid petty scandal mongering and uncharitableness. May I suggest that the fathers should take their share in the writing of letters to their children at school? Fathers have no right to complain bitterly that their grown-up daughters only come to talk to them when they want money if they have taken no interest and active part in their upbringing. Love creates love, and the parents must show their love if they wish to invoke response on the part of the children," says Ethelinda Hadwen in Chambers' Journal. "The parents must also curb their tempers in their intercourse with each other, for depeace in the home plays havoc with children's nerves and tempers. If you wish children to be good tempered see that their nerves are not overstrained and over-excited. Children—especially little children—should live very calm and uneventful days, and the persons who surround them should be of quiet, sunshiny dispositions. The children's pleasures should be simple and inexpensive, no matter how wealthy the parents may be. They should be kept in the background when visitors are present, and in no way brought forward and shown off, else they become filled with self-importance. They should be encouraged to make their own amusements, and should by no means be given everything for which they ask, whether reasonable or unreasonable. If the request be unreasonable the reason for the refusal should be given, and if the request be such as may be granted it is not always well to give the coveted article at once, as in later life we cannot have all we want, even though our wants seem very reasonable. The discipline of drudgery should not be forgotten. The modern tendency is to do away with drudgery almost entirely, but I think that a mistake. Certainly let the parents guide, help and direct their children, but do not make life too easy for them, let them take their fair share of trouble and responsibility."

How a Trust Leader Works.

There is a mistaken idea that the men who direct the great corporations are continually engaged in a vast amount of detail business. That is not the case. Modern business has made the position of the trust leader one requiring not only brains, but brains of the highest order. It may be that the president of a trust does not perform an official act once a day. It may be that his work is confined to initiating the papers that his subordinate heads of departments submit to him, but the fact remains that he is the brains of the concern, and that if he signs papers without knowing their contents he does so because he knows thoroughly the men who submit them. It has been said with truth that the most successful men in these businesses are those who do nothing when things are going smoothly and who do everything when they are going ill. Instead of taking away from the freedom of action of the men who direct these concerns, modern conditions have added to their responsibility. The whole system of trust organization depends upon making each man responsible for the work which he directs. So long as he achieves satisfactory results he is not interfered with. It is said, for example, that the president of the Standard Oil company never issued a positive order to his subordinates. Whether it is a matter of giving employment to a workman or carrying out a deal with a government he merely suggests. If the subordinate prefers to substitute his own judgment in the matter he is permitted to do so, but he is held strictly responsible for the consequences.—Leslie's.

A Setting Hen's Journey.

Buckout & Co. of Tarrytown received a carload of hay recently from Michigan. When Station Agent John H. See broke the seal on the car he was surprised to hear the cackling of a hen inside, and on investigation a large white Leghorn hen was found strutting up and down on the top of the hay, and in one corner of the car was a nest containing six eggs. The car was sealed up in Michigan twenty days before its arrival, and the hen lived in it all that time without any food or water. How the hen got in the car is a mystery, for it is loaded with heavy bales of hay. The hen was in a healthy condition after its 1,000-mile trip, and Mr. See turned it over to one of his men, who will now care for it. The eggs were disposed of without an inquest.

Life Near the Equator.

Rev. Father Grison, of Stanley Falls, Africa, writes that Europeans have a very inaccurate idea of tropical temperatures. He passed eight years at the equator on the Pacific coast, he says, and never saw the mercury above 85 degrees, while at Stanley Falls the maximum is 90 degrees and the nights are deliciously cool. On the other hand, there are frequent tempests of indescribable violence, and Father Grison has counted 66 lightning flashes in one minute, the thunder being continuous, and has seen ten thunderbolts strike within a radius of a few hundred meters in the space of two hours.—Youth's Companion.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

The farmers will probably get a good price for their wheat this year, which will be welcome news. While the crop in the United States will greatly exceed that of any previous year, the world's crop will not be as large.

The enterprising farmers of the towns of Norden and Numedal are to be congratulated upon the fact that they are going to build a creamery. There can be no doubt but that if properly conducted it will prove a success. They must remember, however, that their stock needs to be improved, and that beef cattle do not make succesful dairy animals. The Jerseys give by far the best satisfaction.

The roads in the country around here must be improved, and the sooner the people realize this the better it will be for all concerned. If the townships would go to work and issue bonds and spend the money intelligently in building roads, it would save each individual farmer many dollars each year in lessening the cost of transportation. Under the present conditions it costs the farmers too much to market their goods.

"Van Sant will be renominated without opposition as he should be. The republicans of Minnesota will not think of trying again the experiment of 1888, when Governor McGill was refused a renomination." So says Tams Bixby chairman of the executive committee of the Minnesota state republican campaign committee. Van Sant is making many friends and his administration is successful in every way. Naturally, he could not satisfy everybody in the matter of appointments, which the people now understand. In all probability, the democrats will nominate John Lind, notwithstanding much talk to the contrary, and Van Sant is as strong a man as we could run against him. Lind's going to Minneapolis is, in my judgment, merely preliminary to his future political plans. He, perhaps, would not run again were he to consult his personal wishes; but the party will make a demand which he cannot in honor fail to meet. There is strong sentiment in favor of the renomination of Bob Dunn, for state auditor. Dunn could have the place again by simply saying the word, but at present it looks as if he would not be a candidate. Should he hold to his present ground, the nomination will probably go to Sam Iverson, deputy auditor. Some sporadic opposition to Iverson because he lives in the first district will not cut any figure when it comes time for the convention to meet. The office of state auditor is in many ways the most important one within the gift of our people, and geography never should be permitted to control it. Fitness should be the only qualification required, and on the point of fitness there is nobody, after Dunn, in the entire state, who can touch Iverson.

What the Loggers Want.

The Mississippi Valley Lumberman has the following to offer on the subject of destroying lumber camps by fire as a means of preventing further spread of the disease. "The spread of smallpox in the logging camps of the northern woods during the winter months of the past two or three years has brought up the question of burning the camp buildings as a precaution aginst the further spread of the disease. Leading physicians of both Minnesota and Wisconsin have recommened this method as the only one which in their opinion would prove effective, but in making their recommendation they have not thought of the loss it means to loggers. Many of these camps are erected at a considerable expense and it would certainly seem as though there would be some other method of destroying any germs that might cause a recurrence of the malady during the coming winter. Houses in town where smallpox occurs are not burned. They are thoroughly disinfected, and if it is possible to disinfect carpets, bedding and upholstered furniture it certainly ought to be possible to submit the bare timbers and rough furniture of a logging camp to some treatment that would insure a destruction of any germs that may have been left. However, as the run of the disease is more to be dreaded by the loggers and will prove more costly to them than the building of new camps, it is likely that they will agree to this method of wiping it out. First, however, they would like to have the necessity for taking such extreme measures proven to their satisfaction."

May Build an Ark

Visitors from Warren yesterday reported their town to be under water. Snake River was already bank full when the heavy rain of Wednesday night came, and in consequence the town flooded, causing the people to travel the streets in skiffs. The good people of the town say their patience had already been sorely tried by the continuous and heavy rains, so therefore they are in bad humor over the inundation. One of the Warrenites facetiously remarked that an effort would be made to raise a fund with which to build an ark, in order to prepare for a flood, which they anticipate next. On account of yesterday's deluge the town posponed its 4th of July celebration for a year.—Crookston Times, July 5.

FROM EXCHANGES.

The government has about decided that the best way to allot the lands in Oklahoma which are to be opened to homesteaders on or before August 6th is by lottery, all qualified applicants being permitted to draw and take their chances of getting something good, something not so good or a blank. This has been done in order to avoid the scenes of disorder and bloodshed which marked the first openings of land to settlement in that territory. To say that there is excitement among those who are waiting on the borders is putting it mildly. But if this plan is carried out these folk, which the picturesque slang of that locality has dubbed "sooner" will be in no better position than will those who come in on the very day of the drawing. The capital prizes are something big, it is said. For instance, 320 acres is to be set aside for a townsite for the county seat, located five miles from Fort Sill. As there are expected to be 10,000 citizens all ready to take up a residence ore, it will be seen that 320 acres is is not enough to go round and this means that the adjoining quarter sections will have high value for "additions" to the city some say that $10,000 is a modest sum to express the value of each of the quarter-sections that adjoin the original townsite. Altogether there will be about 13,000 homesteaders to distribute among the lucky ones who draw the prizes, and these will range in value from $1.000 to $5,000.

There is no railroad news looking to the projection of a road into Roseau county. The county however is attracting the attention of the public and investors in lands are giving the county a large amount of advertising. Many visitors of wealth and prominence as well as representatives of large financial concerns who have looked over the county, expressed themselves that it could not possibly be a great while before railroad facilities would be afforded our people. It does seem strange that a county with over 2,600 individual holders of 160 acres of land; a population of over 8,000; with 24 organized townships; 50 school districts, two thriving villages, and a soil that is the best in the state, could be so overlooked by railroad projectors. It may be that when one road is started others will follow and the county will have roads galore. —Roseau Times.

The following is from an exchange: "Look at your nails, and if they are blue, your heart is rather weak, and you ought not to run up stairs or go for a bicycle ride. If on a calm day you want to know in what direction the slightest current of air is moving, wet your finger and hold it up. It feels cool on the side where the breeze strikes it owning to the evaporation. Some night when you awake with the conviction that your house is on fire, this tip will be useful: Fill your mouth with water and sniff. You can smell a fire in the next street. Doctors put this plan in practice when called to a case of poisoning from prussic acid, for the only way of detecting this highly poisonous matter in the body is by the sense of smell."

The school election held last Thursday evening for the purpose of voting upon the proposition of issuing bonds to the amount of $15,000 and giving the school board power to locate the high school was defeated by a vote of 84 to 55. While the vote cast was very small (there are at least 1000 in this district entitled to vote) it does not appear that those voting against the bonds were opposed to the building of a high school, but were not agreed as to the proper location.

The Crookston College catalogue for the coming year is just out. It is a very interesting pamphelt showing what progress a private school can have when it meets the demands of people. Records Stolen.—The office of the register of deeds at Roseau was burglarized at an early hour Monday morning and nine books of record stolen. One was afterward recovered, being found on the road west of town. There is no clue to the identity of the guilty parties, but the officers are actively at work on the case. The means of gaining entrance to the office employed by the burglars leads the authorities to believe that the burglars were experienced in the work, although it is not understood what use cracksmen could have for the records. They secured nothing else. It may transpire when the matter is sifted to the bottom that the burglars were men interested in local affairs, even if they are apparently experienced entering offices.

To Be Built in Thief River Falls.

S. Frenzen, the gentleman who is making arrangements to build a $10,000 hotel in this city, has had a Crookston architect draw the plans for the proposed new building, which will be one of the best in the northwest. It will be of brick, three stories high and contain all the modern improvements. While Mr. Frenzen has not yet selected a site or made definite arrangements for the erection of the building, he is convinced that this city has a bright future, and will have his hotel in running order this fall.

Drowned at St. Hilaire.

Last Friday evening Sigbol Gjerde was drowned while bathing in Red Lake river at St. Hilaire with some companions. The young man was employed in a lumber mill. After finishing his day's work and partaking of his supper, a number of his fellow workmen decided to go bathing in Red Lake river. Gjerde was persuaded to go along. All enjoyed the water after the warm day's work and splashed about laughing and cutting up like boys are wont to do on such occasions. All of a sudden, in the midst of the fun, Gjerde was heard to utter a piercing shriek and looking in the direction from whence it came, his companions saw the young man sinking out of sight in the water. They hurried to his rescue, but before they could reach his side, he had sunk for the last time. The news of the unfortunate affair spread rapidly and in consequence the river was soon being dragged for his body by a large number of men. After two hour's work it was recovered. The coroner was notified and arrived Saturday, but did not think it necessary to hold an inquest.

Deceased was 23 years of age and single. His parents reside eight miles east of Angus.

Great quantities of firecrackers are now being received in this country from China, the merchants considering that there will be a big Fourth of July demand for them.

General Miles has long advocated a standing army which should consist of one man for every thousand of our total population, and that is substantially the size of the present establishment. The police force of our largest cities consists of one officer to a population of about four hundred and sixty.

Hartford has adopted the automobile patrol wagon, and the chief of police finds that it has proved successful in every way, resulting in a saving of time and money. An electric wagonette was used pending the delivery of an electric patrol wagon, and the chief says that it did the work of four horses at the nominal expense of 18 cents a day for power.

The Maoris, the aboriginal inhabitants of New Zealand, have actually increased in number during the last decade, and great wonderment is expressed in European publications over the fact that a "subject race" should survive and grow. Here is opportunity for somebody to suggest that the fate of such a race depends a good deal upon the nation to which it is "subject."

A man in North Carolina was selling standing timber—walnut trees. The man who was buying came to one very handsome tree. He told the owner he would pay as much as $50 for that tree. The owner did not sell, but sent for experts. He got $1,500 for the tree (curled walnut) as it stood. The man who cut it down realized $3,000 for it on the cars. It was shipped to New York and veneered one-sixth to half an inch. The sales were watched. The tree brought $60,000.

Queen Margaret of Italy has commissioned the architect Succoni, to construct a memorial on the spot where King Humbert was assassinated. It will take the form of a votive chapel. In front a cross in marble will be erected, and each side of the entrance will be flanked by a marble statue, one representing Sorrow, and the other Death. The first stone of the edifice will be laid on July 29, the anniversary of the death of King Humbert. Succoni is the designer of the monument to Victor Emmanuel, now in course of construction on the hill of the capitol.

Mrs. Elizabeth Burr Hamilton, said to be the last member of the seventh generation of the Burr family, who died at Bridgeport, Conn., last week, at the age of ninety, was the fifth cousin of Aaron Burr, third vice-president of the United States, who killed Alexander Hamilton, the lawyer and statesman, in a duel in 1804. Her death recalls the fact that, though the families of Burr and Hamilton were the most bitter enemies at the beginning of the last century, love found a way thirty-two years after the famous duel to bring the families together again by the marriage of Elizabeth Burr and Alexander Hamilton in 1836.

America still has some things to learn from older countries, particularly in the way of economy. New York City pays about five hundred thousand dollars a year for the disposition of its garbage, while many English cities, by burning their waste matter in special furnaces, not only destroy it in the most effective way, but make a profit from it. Being dried out, it becomes fuel, and the heat which it generates is used to furnish steam for pumping water, operating city electric lighting plants, and grinding up such portions of the refuse as are capable of conversion into cement, tiles and paving blocks. This plan is in use in seventy or eighty of the smaller cities of England, and a million-dollar plant is in process of erection in London.

There is sometimes a wide interval between the conception of a mechanical contrivance and its practical accomplishment. The flying machine, fresh experiments with which are constantly reported, is an example of delay in invention. A few years after the landing of the Pilgrims, Dr. John Wilkins, who afterward married a sister of Oliver Cromwell, published a work in which he said it was possible to make a "flying chariot, in which a man may sit, and give such motion unto it as shall convey him through the air. And this, perhaps, might be made large enough to carry divers men at the same time, together with food for their viaticum, and commodities for traffic." The suggestion of a trade side to air travel points to the remote possibility of a flying-machine combination which will control the "air-line" of the future. At present there is no reason to be alarmed. The business opportunities of the region overhead are still open to all.

The army allows about 33,000 pounds of food a year for fifteen men, but in the Arctic regions people eat at least a quarter as much more. It costs $3 a month more to feed a man in Greenland than in New York.

CRITICAL FOR WHEAT.

There's Danger of Too Much Rain—Corn Improves.

The wheat crop of the Northwest as it stands shows a slight deterioration, as compared with the general conditions a week ago. The prospective yield has been lowered in a moderate degree, principally by the continuation of wet weather conditions that are more unfavorable than otherwise at this time.

Since the seed went into the ground the Northwest has been favored with nearly perfect growing weather. The crop now stands so well as to indicate a splendid yield, barring any calamitous happening in the short time now intervening until harvest. This good outlook was foreshadowed by the favorable conditions that prevailed at seeding time and the period immediately following. The primary indication of a bountiful harvest has been maintained, every succeeding week showing the wheat plant holding its own through the various stages of development. The past week has brought the first evidence of a turn in the opposite direction. Since July 1 the crop has hardly held to the previously indicated high level, and, generally speaking, no further improvement can be noted, while in places enough damage has occurred to bring the prospective yield a shade under that indicated at this time last week. This suggests that whatever favorable reports as to prospective returns may have been made so far, have been based upon the appearance of the crop, standing with the conditions at the maximum for the year. It indicates that July 1 marked the apex as to general conditions, that a further gain cannot reasonably be expected, and that interest from this time on must center in the possibility of maintaining the crop on the present level, until it is harvested.

This is the most critical time for wheat. The next week or ten days will tell the story. As the situation exists to-day there is a bountiful yield in sight. Against it some unfavorable influences are arising. Looking over the whole field there are found some minor instances of injury from cut worms, and local complaints of damage from hail and rust. In no instance have these complaints been sensational, nor are they widespread, yet, taken collectively, they show a considerable area of damage.

Grasshoppers are a menace in the Red river valley. Cool weather and the persistent combative efforts of the farmers, aided by the growth of a small parasite that kills the hoppers, have held down their development and prevented serious damage from this source to date.

Rust and hot winds are to be feared. What is needed to insure the heavy yield is a period of warm, breezy weather. Still and very hot weather would be bad, as it would undoubtedly breed rust.

Most important of all, however, is the fact that the Northwest does not want any more rain at this time. Already there has been more than enough and, in many places, serious damage has been done by too much rain.

There will be an early harvest this year. Wheat is now headed out along the lines of the Northern Pacific and at some points further north. In Southern Minnesota the crop is close to maturity and it is probable harvesting will begin as early as the 15th in some localities.

On the whole the Northwest wheat crop is in a state of maturity beyond the average for this date.

Corn has shown improvement and in general is in better condition than a week ago.

Barley and oats have held up well and the promise previously indicated has been fully maintained.

Spring rye is well along everywhere, and winter rye will be ready for harvest in a few days. The flax acreage has suffered from too much moisture and a lack of sunshine. The development is uneven and the acreage spotted. There has probably been but little damage of an irreparable nature and with weather conditions favoring from now on, flax will show a gain a week hence.

The hay crop will be very heavy.

The following reports are from well-distributed shipping centers throughout the state:

Albert Lea—The crops are all looking well and promise a good harvest, if frequent pieces of wheat are excepted, as many instances are seen where that grain is not only thin upon the ground but short, and unless the weather is extremely favorable will give only small yield. The past two weeks have witnessed a wonderful growth in corn and the rains of the past two weeks have been very beneficial to wild grass meadows and pastures. Haying is quite general now and will be rushed to get it out of the way of harvest that will be here in three or four weeks at the latest, this depending largely upon the weather. Some winter rye is almost ready to cut, but the acreage planted to that crop is small. Chinch bugs have not been reported as serious but there are many potato bugs and paris green is being used extensively by farmers.

Mapleton — Crop conditions in the southern part of Blue Earth county were never better. The rains of the past week have helped out corn and it is pushing forward in nice shape. Wheat is in splendid stand, the heads of good length and if properly filled in will yield a fine crop. It is too early yet to say as to how it will fill. Barley has commenced to turn and will be ready to cut very soon. Oats are also commencing to turn and promise a very fair crop. There is very little flax in this section, corn being the big crop this year.

Rochester — The crops throughout Olmsted county are in excellent condition. The large amount of rainfall and high temperature have caused rapid growth. Wheat is in good condition in nearly all parts of the county. Barley is not an average, though better than expected some days ago. Rye is fast ripening and will return an excellent yield. Corn is rapidly coming to the front.

Ortonville—Crops of all kinds are in excellent condition. Wheat is headed out and is in the milk, stands well and the heads are well filled. The same is true of oats and barley. Wheat and other small grain on sandy soil were somewhat scorched by the hot winds, but on examination it appears that only the extreme tips of the leaves were affected. Very few fields can be found that show any trace or evidence of hot winds or weather. The hay crop is good.

Montevideo—No year has surpassed the present in prospects of a bountiful harvest. Wheat is a little thin in places, and too rank a growth of straw on some rich lands, but on the whole the prospect could not be improved. Barley is already headed out, and promises well. While hay was short early in the season, later rains have made the crop much better than last year, and it is now being cut. Corn in places is weedy, but the stand is even and growing rapidly. There has been no damage by hail in this vicinity. Oats are also heading finely.

Willmar—The crops are looking fine; in fact, the best for years. Wheat is heading out well. The recent rains were not heavy enough to be destructive, and prospects were never better. All kinds of grain promises a good yield. With favorable weather Kandiyohi county will produce the heaviest wheat crop in many years.

Fergus Falls — The crop outlook in Otter Tail county could hardly be better. Wheat and oats are headed out in fine shape, and if the present outlook continues the yield will be the heaviest since 1895, although it will probably fall a little short of the tremendous average of that year on account of the dry weather which checked growth in May. Corn has picked up wonderfully during the recent warm weather and a fair crop is promised. Potatoes and garden truck are growing finely.

Marshall — Crop conditions in Lyon county are the most promising in many years. Some barley will be cut next week. Wheat and oats are fine. Corn is somewhat backward on account of late frosts, but is looking well and will be a good crop. There have been no reports of damage from heat or from storms.

Crookston—Crop conditions in Polk and adjoining counties are not altogether what the farmers could wish them to be, and the prospect of a bumper yield is not good. There are two elements at work that will reduce the yield in the counties of Marshall, Polk, Red Lake, Norman and Clay. These are the long continued rains and the presence of grasshoppers. The first is general except in the eastern portion in Polk county. A large proportion of the land is now flooded, and late sown crops in many localities are under water, while the early sown are standing in water and turning yellow. Experts say the loss will be above 70 per cent, and many are placing the loss at 50 per cent. The hopper loss is greater in Polk and Norman than in the other counties, and is estimated at 10 per cent.

Worthington—Crops of all kinds are looking excellent and the farmers' statements substantiate this report. Rye is about ready to cut and will be heavy. Barley will be ready to cut in about ten days. Wheat and oats are stooling and are promising. Corn is growing rapidly and the acreage will exceed all former years. From present indications there will be a bumper crop.

THE CHURCH'S JUBILEE.

Fiftieth Anniversary of the Founding of the Diocese of Minnesota.

The religious ceremonies attending the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the arrival of Minnesota's first Catholic bishop took place Tuesday at St. Paul seminary, at the end of Grand avenue. Pontifical high mass was celebrated on the grounds of the seminary by Bishop McGolrick of Duluth. Archbishop Ireland delivered a commemorative sermon and a Te Deum was chanted. When the clergy had dined at the seminary two gifts were made to the archbishop. On behalf of the college of St. Thomas he received a purse of $80,000 contributed by the clergy of his province. He was also a recipient of memorial volumes containing an illustrated history of the province. At 4 o'clock the corner stone of the new seminary chapel was laid by Bishop Trobec of St. Cloud. The sermon on that occasion was preached by Bishop O'Gorman of Sioux Falls.

The weather was warm but fair. Upward of two thousand people, including many women and children, witnessed the uncommon spectacle of ecclesiastics in brilliant robes performing elaborate ceremonies in the open air. The pontifical high mass was celebrated at a temporary altar upon an oblong platform erected near the river and west of the seminary's administration building. The celebrant of the mass was Bishop McGolrick of Duluth. The assistant priest was Vicar General Stariha, the deacons of honor Fathers Plut and Kennedy, the deacon of the mass Father Santmeyer, the subdeacon of the mass Father McDavitt, the master of ceremonies Father George Schaeffer. John F. Gehan directed the choir.

The eminent clergymen present were Archbishop Ireland, Archbishop Christie of Vancouver, Bishop Eis of Marquette, Bishop Scannell of Omaha, Bishop Glennon of Cheyenne, Bishop Shanley of Fargo, Bishop O'Gorman of Sioux Falls, Bishop McGolrick of Duluth and Bishop Trobec of St. Cloud, Mgr. Ravoux of St. Paul, who personally received Bishop Cretin on July 2, 1851; Mgr. Buh of Duluth, Mgr. Oster of St. Paul, Abbot Engel of St. John's, Minn. The priests in attendance comprised all those in St. Paul and Minneapolis and many from other parts of the province. At least 400 priests were unable to find accommodation upon the platform.

Secular evidence to the impressive growth of Northwestern Catholicism during the half-century since the arrival here of Bishop Cretin was supplied on the second and last day of the Cretin jubilee by the parade of local Catholic societies Wednesday evening and the subsequent addresses delivered at the auditorium. The parade exhibited more than 3,000 members of benevolent, fraternal and devout societies sprung from the twenty-three Catholic parishes of the city. The program at the auditorium combined combined clergy and laity, Catholic and non-Catholic, the young man and the old resident, in declaration of Bishop Cretin's worth and of the prosperity of the original Cretin diocese. The papal benediction upon the jubilee and the participants therein as conveyed by a personal autograph letter from his holiness auspiciously closed the evening's exercises.

BITS OF NEWS GATHERED AT ST. PAUL.

(Special Correspondence.)

Gov. Van Sant is charged by an individual who signs himself "Herbert H. Nichols" with spoiling the last Memorial day exercises at Hallock, Minn., and the writer therefore demands $400 damages from his excellency, the amount the special program of the day cost the town. The letter was received by registered mail recently, addressed to the governor, with "personal" written in one corner.

The writer starts out with his bill of $400 for spoiling the "horse and coyote racing" at Hallock. Just how the governor is supposed to have "spoiled" the racing is not stated. The governor is further informed by Mr. Nichols that there were seventeen fights at a neighboring village July 4 with which his excellency neglected to interfere.

Inclosed in the envelope with the letter are a number of newspaper clippings and a small flag on which is written "Herbert H. Nichols, He Tore It Down." The letter has a postscript saying: "More to come later," and the address of the writer is given as Northcote, Minn.

Executive Agent S. F. Fullerton of the game and fish commission has received a report from Deputy Warden P. O. Stevens of Detroit relative to infringement of the game laws by men at Thief River Falls, who have killed a number of moose. Stevens has already collected evidence against seven men. They are killing the cows, then capturing the calves and selling them to Eastern park associations for as high as $100 each. Stevens seized five calves and confined them over night in a barn at Thief River Falls. The next morning he found some one had forced an entrance into the barn and killed three of the calves.

Congressman Stevens says that an investigation will soon be made in Washington county by the postal authorities with the idea of establishing free rural delivery throughout the county. If it proves a success in Washington county other well-populated counties will be inspected with a view to extending rural delivery wherever necessary.

Commissioner Fullerton has been authorized by the state game commission to confiscate the guns and dogs of persons that begin shooting game birds before the opening of the season in September. He may employ as many deputies as are needed. Last year the illegal shooting during July and August was so extensive that it spoiled the shooting for the sportsmen that obeyed the law and did not enter the fields until September.

The commission approved the plans for improving the fish hatchery, and ordered the work to begin at once. The commission will spend $6,500 in building five new ponds and opening the springs on the land donated by the city of St. Paul for the use of the hatchery.

The commission decided not to appoint an attorney. The attorney general, in the view of the commission, is legal adviser of that body according to the law, and the county attorneys are compelled to prosecute the cases which the commission brings to their notice.

The commission approved the exhibit for the state fair this fall. The fair board donated $700 for the exhibit, and the commission will collect choice specimens of fish, animals and stuffed birds for the exhibition.

'HOPPERS DO LITTLE DAMAGE.

Pork, Marshall and Norman County Fields All Right.

"The reports sent out concerning the damage done to the crops by grasshoppers in the Red river valley are greatly exaggerated," said L. S. Snyder of Crookston recently. "The damage suffered from the grasshoppers is insignificant, and if those counties have no more heavy rains before harvest, this year's crop, with the possible exception of that of 1895, will be the largest in the history of the grain belt."

Mr. Snyder is interested in Red river valley lands and says he has made a personal canvass of Polk, Marshall and Norman counties, in which it is reported the hoppers have devastated the small grain fields. Continuing, Mr. Snyder said: "The grasshoppers have done some harm but the danger is now past and the energetic use of the hopperdozer, together with the heavy rains, prevented disaster.

LAID THE CORNER STONE.

The Polish Catholic Church of St Cloud Lays Its Corner Stone.

Sunday was a great day for the Polanders of St. Cloud and their friends. The corner stone to their new church edifice in the west end of that city was laid with very impressive ceremonies. Bishop James Trobec was in charge of the ceremony, and was assisted by several members of the clergy. Every Catholic society in the city attended in a body, and practically the entire congregation from the Polish Catholic church of North Prairie, 200 strong, drove into the city, a distance of nearly twenty-five miles, in order to witness the ceremony. A sermon was delivered by Fr. Duedek of Browerville, and the bishop made a few remarks in English.

Stillwater, Minn., July 10—The board of prison managers is holding its last regular meeting. Applications for many paroles were filed, and eight were granted, one being to Charles R. Zachau of St. Paul, who embezzled from a bank by which he was employed and was sentenced to a term of eight years, beginning July 2, 1897.

Chicago, July 11. — Mistaking toadstools for mushrooms, three men employed as carpenters by the Austin Driving association were probably fatally poisoned.

WOMAN AND HOME.

CASH OR ACCOUNTS.

The question of cash or accounts is one that is debatable in the mind of the modern woman, particularly the city woman. Distances in a large city are so inexorable that the conveniences of mail or telephone shopping is very tempting. It is possible nowadays, indeed, to take advantage of bargain counter attractions at long range. Many women, knowing their shops well, will unhesitatingly telephone for a marked down article on opening the morning paper to find it advertised, some shoppers holding an account at different stores for no other purpose. Sometimes, indeed, these purchases can be sent C. O. D., but often they cannot.

In the matter of exchanges, too, the charge customer has an advantage in the ease and celerity with which she can manage these transactions. Against, however, this saving of time and strength and of opportunity must be set the objection, obviously important, of a temptation to extravagance, says Harper's Bazar. When an article is to be charged it seems much easier to make the purchase. One of the phrases common among women hesitating at this point: "It will only need a little larger check, and a few dollars one way or the other will make no difference," and it rarely fails to tip the scale in favor of the purchase, yet it is just here that the danger of an account lies in the establishment of moderate means, and the woman who finds herself slipping along this, easy, dangerous road can find safety only in stern repression; or to permit the account to lapse. An every day balancing of accounts is a wonderful safeguard for a housekeeper, and seldom occurs with the woman who charges things.

WORK FOR WOMEN.

Science and art open their treasure houses and offer new realms of exploration and pursuit. Life is full of fascination and enchantment, and thus finer inflorescence of culture, this true development of the individual comes from insight and energy. The Norse heaven had seven floors, each of which was entered after conquering the one preceding.

Life has its many floors, and after conquering the materials there is the spiritual to be conquered, and this needs all the strength, and all the time, and all the powers of the individual. "Progress is the realization of Utopias." "You have built your castle in the air," sair Thoreau; "now put your foundations under it." No dream can be too fair for realization, and life is a period in which to realize these highest individual possibilities.

NEED A MORE SIMPLE LIFE.

In writing of the boasted progress of the last century, "An American mother" asks in the Ladies' Home Journal for June, "What has the 19th century done to the woman herself? Are her school training, her colleges and her work in art and literature making her a more womanly woman, more fit to be a wife and mother? If not, they are losses to her, not gains. The chief change which the last century made in the American woman was that it tempted her to give up for the new occupations of art, reform and money making, her own real work as a homemaker, wife and mother. The 19th century has dragged our women from their natural base. It has given them noble surroundings for their lives; literature, art, social power. But they are not content. They are nervous and restless beyond any former race of women. The food given them is too light. They look out on the world with starved eyes. The wiser among them are finding out that what they want is not show and public work and applause, but a simple life, repose and the homely affections of home."

MODISH HAIR COLORING.

Fashionable hair in Paris now is dark mahogany shade. It is said to be far more beautiful than anything hitherto accomplished in the way of changes from the natural hue, says the New York Press. Nor is the process of transformation so difficult as was the yellowing of hair. Probably because the mahogany hue now in vogue so much more nearly resembles the natural dark coloring of at least the Frenchwoman's hair, the little irregularities in the working of the chemicals are not noticed.

FOR TIDE RECKONING.

MACHINE INVENTED TO DO THIS SORT OF WORK.

It Works Out the Enormously Complicated Calculations of Tidal Variations —Only One Other Instrument Like It in the World—Saves Mental Effort.

A machine that will do the work of thirty expert mathematicians is being constructed by the government in its scientific instrument shop on Capitol Hill, Washington. It is to be an improvement on an instrument in use in the bureau of the Coast Survey which has charge of calculating the tides. This machine will be in a class all by itself as a mathematician. England has one which does a similar class of work, but does not carry its calculations so far. The British instrument was invented by Lord Kelvin. The American instrument was contrived by E. Terrel, an employe of the United States Coast Survey. The American machine now in use cost $3,500. It stands about two feet high and is eighteen inches across. Its half a foot of depth is a maze of wheels, pulley and levers. It does wonderful things. There is a little crank on the lower left hand side, and at a simple turn of that crank the machine will give the answer to a problem involving ninety-one separate calculations. The problems it works out are the enormously complicated calculations of tidal variations. In the year 1903 some ship will be in the harbor of Karachi, India, at the head of the Arabian sea. Suppose the ship arrives at 6:30 in the morning on the 1st day of October. The captain will have a printed table in his pilot house, and in that table he will read that at that particular hour of that particular day of that particular year there is seven feet of tide in the bay. By referring to a chart showing the depth of the bay normally he will know just how much water there is for his vessel.

The calculation by which it is possible to predict seven feet of tide at that place and time was made by the United States government's machine on May 17 last in Washington. The machine owned by the British government is the only other one by which the calculating could have been done; but on account of the enormous volume of such work to be done the two governments try to divide the territory. Foreign governments have frequently applied to the United States to do some tide forecasting for harbors important to their commerce with the machine invented by Mr. Terrel, which the new one is expected to supersede. They have been quite willing to pay for such work; but as a rule the coast survey has been unable to comply with such requests, owing to the pressure of its own work. Dr. R. A. Harris of the Coast Survey devised the plans for the new machine now being constructed. He has taken suggestions from the two instruments now in existence and hopes to produce one which will combine the good features of both. The employment of mechanical apparatus for doing work usually performed by the human mind is more extensively seen in the government scientific department than in any other place in the country. The multiplying and dividing machine, for example, is a great saver of time and mental labor not to mention its absolute accuracy. The machine declines to make mistakes, and if the operator tries to make seven go into six, will ring a bell in protest. Practically all the adding in the government's coast survey work is done by machines. Where the column contains three-quarters of a million figures, as frequently happens in the computations, the saving in mental effort is very considerable.—New York Sun.

A Watch Like a Flower.

In Zurich a very novel watch has just been made. It forms the cup or heart of a jewelled flower, which is intended to be worn as an ornament. The flower itself can be opened or closed by touching a tiny spring, and when it is closed the little watch is not visible. When a lady wearing such an ornament desires to know the time all she has to do is to touch the spring, whereupon the flower opens and the watch is revealed. The little watch is fastened to the dress by an ordinary safety pin. The artist who designed this timepiece sold it for $800 a few days after he finished it, and now the beautiful jewel is attracting so much attention that there is little doubt many similar watches will be fashioned in the near future.

Egyptian Recipe for Restoring Hair.

The care of the hair, so far as we know, begins with Egypt. We are told that during the reign of Teti (or Teta), which was sometime between 4000 B. C. and 3000 B. C., a hair restorer was invented for the mother of the King. Manetho credits Teti with a work on anatomy, so he may have been the author of the tonic. From a copy of the original which is supposed to be the oldest medical recipe, the following translation is made. A remedy for restoring the hair. It was made for Shisha, the mother of our majesty, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Teti, who has a true voice. The paw of a dog, the seed of the date and the hoof of an ass. HOW TO BREATHE.

Exercises That Will Bring a High Chest, and Full Bust.

Breathing exercises are invaluable if one would have a high chest, firm, full bust and a waist round and supple, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. Nature did not intend us to waddle about with drooping chests, looking like consumptives ready to give up. Expand the lungs to the limit. Raise your chest and keep it raised. Practice the exercises as they are given here, but make it a rule to breathe correctly all the time. It is quite as necessary to get all the bad air out as it is to get plenty of fresh air in. When you rise in the morning, slip on a bath robe and bedroom slippers. Open the windows. To take breathing exercises without perfect ventilation in the room is to waste your time. Place yourself in an erect, easy position, with one foot a little forward, allowing the weight to rest upon it. Put the arms akimbo, with fingers pressing on the abdominal muscles in front and the thumbs on the muscles on either side of the spine. Hold the head straight and the hips back, the same with the shoulders, chest high and full. Take a deep, tranquil breath, but one that will cause the chest to rise and fall fully and freely at every effort. Do this 20 times. In the act of inspiration take in as much air as you can hold. In the act of respiration give out as little as possible. This is particularly necessary in effusive breathing, which is excellent for chest development. Draw in a full breath, and send it forth in a prolonged sound of the letter H. Never mind if you do sound like a steam radiator ready to explode. You will get a chest, and the girl who laughs and sneers will not. Exercise in expulsive breathing: Draw in a full breath and emit it with a lively expulsive force, still clinging to your H sound. Do not prolong it like you do in your effusive breathing. Let it be a sort of snort, the breath being projected into the air. Before going to sleep, give your lungs an air bath. Lie flat on the back with no pillow under the head. Place the arms close to the sides, then inhale and exhale slowly, allowing yourself a rest of five or ten seconds between breaths. Do this 15 times. Then, with arms extended straight out across the bed, breathe slowly and deeply 15 times more. You will sleep like a top, unless you have been filling up on Welsh rarebit or crab ravigotte a la Bellevue.

YANKEE IS PASSING AWAY.

Native-Born New Englanders Are Now in the Minority There.

That the native population of New England is not maintaining its numerical strength is pretty well known. Hence the facts brought out in the vital statistics of Connecticut for last year, that the native population is fast being overwhelmed by the element of immediate foreign extraction, will surprise no one. It appears that in all sections of the state the deaths among the native population exceeds the births from native parentage, while the burden of providing a natural increase in the population rests wholly upon people of foreign birth. This is true of the country as well as the urban districts. In forty-one back towns, peopled largely by natives, the deaths exceeded the births last year by 240. In the cities of New Haven, Hartford, Meriden, Waterbury, New London, Norwich and Bridgeport the births from native-born parents number 3,393, while the deaths of native-born numbered 4,227; among the foreign-born births were 4,227 and deaths only 1,867—there possibly being an error in the duplication of the figures 4,227, but in any event for the whole state, the native births numbered 8,229 and deaths 10,388, and the foreign births 8,219 and deaths only 3,678. From such facts it is easy to figure out the early displacement of the older native element by a population of immediate or very recent foreign origin. The Massachusetts vital statistics reveal the same population tendencies. There are some countervailing considerations to be taken into account when studying such statistics as the above. But after all allowances are made the fact remains that the population of New England, of more than one generation of American nativity seems to be losing ground. This may arise—doubtless does arise—from the emigration of the yankee youth toward the west, and in making account of this the old New England family is unquestionably proving to be at least barely self-perpetuating, but on New England soil this yankee element is slowly but surely being engulfed by other peoples who are comparative strangers to the region.—Springfield Republican.

One Potwalloper in England.

The preliminary register for 1896 showed that there was then only one potwalloper in all England. On seeing the term for the first time one might easily imagine that a potwalloper was a species of ichthyosaurus or some other reptile of a past age. It will be discovered upon inquiry, however, that the term "potwalloper" is literally one who boils a pot, and was applied to voters in certain boroughs of England, where before the passage of the reform bill of 1832 the qualification for suffrage was to have boiled (walloped) his own pot in the parish for six months.

Hoke Smith, who was Secretary of the Interior in the cabinet of President Cleveland, is now serving his second term as member of the Atlanta school board.

Fight With Panther

Three Sportsmen in Exciting Battle in India.

An exciting story of a fight with a panther is given by a writer in the Asian. The incident occurred while three sportsmen were shooting small game in the western Ghats, a range of mountains in Southern India. Listening intently B. fancied that he caught the word "bagh," but it was impossible to distinguish sounds clearly in the pandemonium that was going on, and it seemed almost incredible that anything in the way of big game could have remained in the beat so late. So putting the fancy concerning the word he had heard down to imagination, or else the possibility of a small wildcat—for natives call everything of the cat species "bagh"—he did not change his small shot cartridges. Three minutes afterward there was a stealthy rustle in the tangled grass and bushes in front of him, and, expecting a hare or a jungle fowl, he threw his gun forward just as the bushes parted and the savage head of a huge panther rose into view about twenty-five yards away. Utterly staggered B. lowered his gun again. To fire at a panther with small shot is wise only when you are anxious to obtain an express passage to the next world, and before he could change his cartridges the brute had seen him and sunk silently back into the undergrowth, B. catching a glimpse of his heavy tawny body gliding laterally across the beat in the direction of F.'s station. Springing to his feet and shouting a hasty word of warning to F., which, it afterward appeared, the latter heard only imperfectly, B. replaced his hot cartridges with ball and attempted to follow the panther. But the undergrowth was thick, and his progress being necessarily slow, he had not proceeded more than a few yards when a shot rang out, quickly followed by another, and the next second F.'s voice reached him vigorously shouting for assistance. "B., H., for heaven's sake look sharp or I'm done for!" This was followed by muffled growls and snarls, coupled with reiterated, but fainter shouts for help from F. Crashing blindly through the undergrowth toward the sounds, B. stumbled almost on his head into the space comparative open jungle which fronted F.'s station. As he did so, and vainly tried to steady his pulse and hand. H., from the opposite direction, also burst on the scene. And the sight they both saw was sufficiently fearful. F., on one knee held the panther by the throat at arm's length with his left hand, while with his right he was making spasmodic efforts to draw his hunting knife. And such was the terrific power of his desperate grip that the panther's tongue was protruding and its eyes almost starting from its head. But, although F.'s immense physical strength, still further increased by the despair which redoubles one's forces, prevented the brute from closing and using its teeth, yet it was kicking with its hind claws exactly as a cat does when its stomach is tickled, and the bone of F.'s left arm was stripped almost bare of the skin and flesh, which was hanging in gory festoons nearly up to the shoulder. Sick at the sight, the whole scene for the moment swam before B.'s eyes, but recalled to his manlier self by a piteous entreaty of poor F., who was weakening rapidly, to chance shooting him, B. braced up and ran toward the scene of the terrible conflict. H., however would have been before him, but that a root caught his foot as he ran and sent him sprawling. The next second B. had run up close and blown the savage brute's brains out just as F. fell in a heap with the dead panther on the top of him. An improvised litter and a rapid removal to the nearest small station (about twelve miles) followed, and for many a week F. kept his bed. When he eventually recovered his arm was like a withered limb, and has been of little use to him since.

A Remarkable River.

Is the Asiatic Tsang-Po, the Highest Navigable Stream in the World.

The Tsang-Po river, in Asia, is in several respects the most remarkable stream in the world. It is the highest of all navigable rivers, flowing for nearly 1,000 miles at an elevation of from 11,000 to 14,000 feet. During the greater part of its course its current is sluggish, but for 100 miles or more the mighty river in its descent to the coast plain runs with the speed of a mountain torrent. Though one of the largest of Central Asian streams, it has never been followed from its source to its mouth, and until recently it was doubtful into what river it flowed. The attempts to solve its mysteries have been attended with almost unparalleled heroism, endurance, steadfastness and self-sacrifice, for the principal explorers of the Tsang-Po have been animated, not as those who have sought the fountain spring of the Nile, by the hope of the world's applause at their success—that was denied them—but for a simple daily wage and the consciousness of loyalty to duty.

The physical history of the Tsang-Po is briefly this: It rises in the extreme southwestern corner of Thibet close to the sources of the Ganges, the Indus and its great affluent, the Satlej, at a height of nearly 15,000 feet. Receiving the drainages of the slopes of the Himalayas and of a little known Tibetan range running parallel with these mountains, it soon becomes a stream wide and deep enough to be navigable. There is a considerable boat traffic upon it at an elevation, but little below the summit of Mont Blanc. It flows due east for a matter of 800 miles, receiving numerous large tributaries from south and north, and when near Lassa it is at low water nearly a third of a mile wide and 20 feet deep; in flood two miles wide and of unknown depth. In longitude 94 degrees east it makes a sharp bend to the south and passes through the Himalayas in a course known only to the savages who dwell upon its precipitous banks.

When last seen by an explorer, it is at a height of from 8,000 to 11,000 feet, but when it emerges in Assam it is only 400 feet above the sea level. From this point it pursues its way for another 800 miles as the Brahmaputra to the Ganges and the Bay of Bengal. There has been a long controversy, into the details of which it is not necessary to enter, as to whether the Irawadi or the Brahmaputra is the continuation of the Tsang-Po. Though there has been as yet no distinct evidence, the last expedient of throwing in marked logs in Tibet having failed, the general consensus of scientific opinion is in favor of the Brahmaputra, and the latest English Gazetteer describes it under this name.

THE SULTAN'S WORKSHOPS.

In Constantinople the Sultan of Turkey maintains workshops where the costly presents which from time to time he sends to foreign princes are turned out. The Turkish workman, says a writer who visited these shops, is uncommonly clever, and is especially conspicuous by the astonishing readiness which he displays in imitating strange work. Thus, I was shown an imitation of a German orchestrion, and the original could scarcely be distinguished from the copy. In the goldsmith's art the Turks are extremely adroit, and most of the Turkish orders are made in the Sultan's workshops. The objects destined to be sent to foreign potentates are generally cabinet work. Such pieces of furniture, which are often the work of many years, are inlaid most artistically with ivory, mother-of-pearl, ebony and precious metals, and they are thus of great value. In addition to these workshops, the Sultan possesses a porcelain manufactory, which is managed by a French expert, and turns out very sterling examples of the potter's art.

Dragged by a Fish.

The greatest single-handed struggle with a fish off the Pacific coast took place in the waters off Santa Catalina island recently, says a Los Angeles writer. At 6 p. m. E. N. Dickerson of New York had a bite from a fish so large that it at once began to tow the boat, and from that time till after 5 the next morning the struggle continued. Then, nearly exhausted, Mr. Dickerson attempted to tow the big fish into Avalon bay, but the line finally parted and the monster escaped, the fight having lasted eleven hours and fifteen minutes. The nearest approach to this record has been that of T. S. Manning, who fought his fish seven and a half hours, and J. C. Wood, who tackled a fish that wore out two men who each fought it seven hours, and then the fish escaped, having towed the boat fourteen and a quarter hours and covered a distance estimated from thirty to thirty-five miles. Mr. Dickerson's wife and an oarsman were with him all night. Four fish, running in weight from 424 to 132 pounds, were caught by other fishermen.

TASTE OF LIBERTY

YOUNGER BROTHERS WALK OUT OF THE GATES OF STILLWATER PRISON.

SEE MUCH TO INTEREST THEM

Unnoticed They Walk About the Streets of Stillwater—Electric Car Excites Their Wonder—Entertain Friends at Dinner—Will Remain Warden's Guests Until Employment Is Obtained.

St Paul, July 16.—At 10 o'clock yesterday morning the Younger brothers walked out of the doors of the Stillwater prison free men for the first time in twenty-five years.

During the morning they walked about the streets of Stillwater unnoticed, for in their civilian garments they were not recognized. At noon they returned to the prison, where they entertained some friends, including several newspaper men, at dinner in the governor's private quarters. The company was waited upon by a Chinese murderer under life sentence. In the afternoon they took a steamboat ride on Lake St. Croix, and last night they slept behind the prison walls—not as prisoners, but more as guests of the warden.

Immediately after chapel service yesterday morning, while Cole Younger, head nurse, was at his accustomed post in the prison hospital, and Jim, librarian and postman, was in the library, each was informed that he was wanted "down in front." They supposed that they were to see visitors in the reception room. But the brothers met a deputy warden, who handed each a suit of civilian clothes and a telescope valise. The brothers put the clothes on without delay, and in company with several newspaper men they Started for the Gate.

On the way the party passed a guard and the prison physician, but neither recognized the Youngers in their civilian suits. Both looked like prosperous business men, and their step was as elastic and they walked as erect as any of the less aged men in the party.

As they emerged from the immense prison gate, behind which they were confined for a quarter of a century, they looked about in a dazed manner, each gave a long breath as though trying to expel the prison air and fill their lungs with the breath of freedom. They did not utter a word, but the expression on their faces showed a feeling which it would be necessary to see to appreciate.

Then with one look back at the grim walls of the prison they started off at a brisk walk toward the city of Stillwater. At the edge of town they caught their first sight of an electric street car. The party stopped while Jim and Cole took a second look at what to them was a marvelous sight. The men asked a number of questions about the working of the cars and discussed the question of electricity as they proceeded down town.

They showed considerable knowledge of this and other modern appliances, but which they had never seen.

Roamed About Town.

For an hour or more the men roamed about the business section of the city and enjoyed the sights with as much enthusiasm as boys who were on their first visit from the farm and were killing time while waiting for the hour when the circus would begin. They made comments upon the appearance of the buildings, the architecture, the evidence of prosperity, and discussed the objects displayed in store windows. The men then returned to the prison, walking the entire distance without showing the least fatigue, and were ushered into Warden Wolfer's private apartments, where an elegant dinner was served and to which Cole and Jim, as well as their friends, did ample justice. The conversation was on books, dress, etc.

Cole, the larger of the two, wore a dark blue serge suit, a blue and white shirt, a white turn-down collar, a gray silk four-in-hand tie and calf shoes. Jim's suit was dark gray, his shirt pink and white, his four-in-hand a blue polka dot. No one would have suspected by the that they had once been notorious outlaws and bank robbers. They appeared perfectly at ease, their conversation was carried on fluently and without hesitation, and in every way they gave evidence of refined feelings.

After dinner a launch was placed at their disposal by Banker Bronson, a member of the prison board, and with Mr. Bronson and a number of friends the Youngers spent the afternoon on Lake St. Croix. Jim was at the helm and at one point steered the little craft near the Wisconsin shore. There was a hearty laugh all around when some one remarked that they were violating their parole by leaving the state without permission.

In the evening they returned to the prison, where several hours were passed pleasantly in the warden's private quarters, where they later went to bed.

The matter of employment has not yet been decided upon, and the men will remain the guests of the warden until positions are selected, which may be several days.

Attempted Suicide.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 16.—Dexter J. Knapp, one of the most prominent residents of the state, yesterday morning fired a shot into his head with suicidal intent, which will prove fatal. He was three times appointed state fish warden for South Dakota. Prior to coming to this city he was a lumber dealer in Minneapolis. He was fifty-seven years of age.

EPWORTH LEAGUERS STRANDED.

Stripped of All Their Possessions by Gang of Pickpockets.

Glenwood Springs, Colo., July 16—The thoroughly organized gang of pickpockets operating at Colorado Springs is responsible for a party of about twenty Epworth Leaguers becoming stranded here. Men and women alike have been robbed, not only of every cent they had with them, but of railroad tickets as well, and unless the railroads will issue tickets back home on their proof of having purchased and paid for rides to San Francisco and back they will be compelled to ask aid from the county authorities. In at least ten instances thieves even secured their victims' trunks on the stolen baggage checks. Maj. S. K. Hooper, general passenger agent of the Denver & Rio Grande railroad, authorized the Glenwood Springs agent to furnish passes to Ogden to stranded passengers who desired to continue their journey west.

BROTHER KILLS BROTHER.

Outcome of a Quarrel Over a Game of Craps.

Carnegie, Pa., July 16.—Brother killed brother over a quarrel over a game of craps in East Carnegie yesterday afternoon. Paul Butler, colored, and his brother Frank, in company with several other colored friends, went to the hills back of East Carnegie, near Idlewood, and began to shoot craps. The men were all playing pleasantly when a quarrel arose between the brothers over 5 cents. They were sitting on the grass beside each other, and after several angry names had been called back and forward the two men rose to their feet. Frank pulled a 38-caliber revolver from his pocket and fired twice at his brother's head. Both shots took effect, the last entering the abdomen, causing death. The murderer gave himself up.

HAILSTONES DAMAGE CORN.

Lumps of Frozen Rain as Big as Hens' Eggs Fall in Iowa.

Burlington, Iowa, July 16. — Reports from counties north of here tell of heavy wind, rain and hail storms. Hailstones as large as hens' eggs fell, doing much damage to corn and knocking fruit from trees. Many acres of corn were ruined in Louisa and Washington counties. Lightning did much damage, burning several barns, a number of grain stacks and killing live stock. Two men were reported seriously injured by hail in Louisa county. A barn was burned and the owner badly injured by the lightning near West Point. Several small buildings were blown down in other localities.

VISITATION OF JUNE BUGS.

Ohio Town Captured by Them—Electric Lights Smothered.

Zanesville, Ohio, July 16.—Zanesville is almost entirely in darkness to-night as a result of the visitation of June bugs in countless numbers. Electric light globes are filled and the lights are completely smothered by the ashes of burned bugs. The hotel offices are infested with such swarms that it is necessary to close the doors, notwithstanding the intense heat. In several instances church services were interfered with. The river bridges are almost impassable to pedestrians. The atmosphere about the lights is filled with clouds of live insects and floors are covered to a depth of several inches by dead ones.

"SCAR FACE" JIM LOCATED.

Says He Will Never Be Taken Alive.

Ardmore, Ind. T., July 16. — "Scar Face" Jim, alleged to be a member of the Dalton gang of outlaws, was located Saturday night in a secluded spot twenty miles east of here, suffering from a bullet wound. Last week at Sulphur he had a desperate fight with deputy United States marshals and was wounded but escaped. The marshals had a narrow escape. United States Marshal Hammer and several deputies started for the scene yesterday. "Scar Face" says he will not be taken alive.

PENSION EMPLOYES.

Burlington Considers Plan for Pensioning Old Employes.

Chicago, July 16.—Officers of the Burlington railroad are considering a plan for the pensioning of their company's employes. No definite system has been adopted, and consideration of the subject has not passed the preliminary stage, but that the corporation will adopt some sort of a way for providing for aged and disabled men after the manner of the Illinois Central, Pennsylvania, Northwestern and other roads is quite certain.

Murder and Suicide.

St. Joseph, Mo., July 16. — The dead bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Prange of Omaha were found beside the public highway, half a mile south of Lake Station. There was a bullet hole in the woman's right temple and one in the man's forehead. Clasped in Prange's right hand was a 38-caliber revolver. It was evidently a case of murder and suicide.

SCORCHED BY SUN

HOT WEATHER CONTINUES IN NINETEEN STATES AND TERRITORIES.

SEEMS TO BE NO RELIEF IN SIGHT

Cry of Crop Damage Continues to Come From the States Affected—Safe to Say That Half the Corn Crop Will Be Lost — Vegetation Shriveled by Sun's Fierce Rays—Chinch Bugs in the Northwest.

Washington, July 16.—Reports to the weather bureau show that the hot weather continued in nineteen states and territories of the great corn belt, the Ohio valley and various portions of the South. There seems to be no immediate evidence of abatement, except in the South and Southwest, where local thunderstorms may cause some moderations. The states affected include Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Colorado and Michigan. It has become considerably warmer also in the upper lake region and in New England, Marquette, Mich., reporting yesterday a record-breaking temperature of 102 degrees. Hope of rain in the region affected by the heat was not fulfilled, only traces of it appearing in one or two sections, except at Galveston, Tex., where about one-third of an inch of rain fell and in Eastern Texas, where there were local thunderstorms. The temperatures reported yesterday show only slight variation from the extremes of the past few days and these are due to local conditions entirely. In Des Moines, Iowa, the temperature was 100 and in Kansas City 102, in Omaha 102, while at Davenport, Iowa, Denver, Little Rock, New Orleans, North Platte, St. Paul and Vicksburg it was 96 or higher.

Crop Damage in Many States.

The cry of crop damage continues to come from the various states affected. In addition to the damage from hot winds reports of serious damage to wheat from chinch bugs come from Southern Minnesota and portions of the Dakotas.

With no relief in sight, the fears for the crops are fast becoming realities, and the scarcity of water and generally dry conditions make the element of fire a most serious one. What the real damage to corn, the crop most affected, will be, is problematical, but it is probably safe to say that half the crop will be lost. The supply of water is short in almost every direction and the shipment of cattle and hogs to the market to save them must continue.

Prayers for rain were offered in a score of Kansas and Missouri churches yesterday. Weather experts say that rainfall under the present conditions is almost an impossibility. Weeks and months of torridity have rendered the lower stratum of the air so hot that the rain drops would be transformed to vapor in passing through it. Vegetation is shriveled and crop estimates are being reduced every hour. Cattlemen are flooding the markets with livestock they are unable to feed or water, and prices have dropped to record-breaking figures.

Western states report many prostrations in the farming districts, and where work during the day is attempted the farmer is likely to lose his horses from sunstroke. The situation is the worst ever experienced.

MEDICAL LAW IS SUSTAINED.

Police Powers of Wisconsin to Regulate Practice Upheld by Circuit Court Decision.

Madison, Wis., July 16. — The state medical law was held to be constitutional and a valid exercise by the legislature of the police powers of the state by Judge Siebecker in the circuit court. The court quashed the alternative writ of mandamus to compel the medical board to issue a license to James R. Kellogg of Portage, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago, without examination and dismissed the case.

Huron, S. D., July 16. — Fire which broke out at noon Saturday in the Chicago & Northwestern railroad yards was not checked until the immense fuel sheds, coal bins, many hundred tons of coal, a quantity of lumber and building material and two freight cars were consumed. Loss, $10,000. Heroic efforts by the fire department saved the railway shops.

Prairie Fire in Dakota.

Miller, S. D., July 16. — A prairie fire started just west of town yesterday, burning over a half-mile by two miles long. Harvest is coming on quite rapidly now.

Lord Kitchener also reports that Sheepe's commando (as announced in the Associated Press dispatches early last week) burned the public buildings in Murraysburg, Cape Colony, and some farm houses. According to further advices from Lord Kitchener the columns under Col. Featherstone and Col. Dixon have reached Zeerust, in the Transvaal. They met with opposition and made some captures. The British casualties were one officer killed and three officers and twenty-four men wounded.

WORK OF INCENDIARIES

Is Indicated in a Series of Fires in San Francisco.

San Francisco, July 16.—A series of fires early yesterday morning indicated that incendiaries were at work. Stables were made the special mark of their torches. Twenty horses were burned. The fires occurred in the same general neighborhood, near Larkin street. At midnight the stable of the San Mateo Dairy company, with its contents, was destroyed. Twelve horses perished. While the firemen were at work an alarm was turned in from a stable on Ellis street, three blocks away. Six horses in the stable were rescued with difficulty. Shortly after 2 o'clock the stable of the Signal Transfer company on Larkin street caught fire. There were fifty head of horses in this stable. Eight of them were burned to death.

HARD FIGHT WITH FIRE.

Necessary to Blow Up Buildings to Check the Flames.

Enid, Okla., July 16.—Four blocks of business houses on the public square were destroyed by fire in less than three hours time Saturday night. Shortly after midnight Saturday night. The water supply was inadequate and it was necessary to blow up buildings with dynamite to check the flames. Owing to the continued drouth, everything burned like matchwood. A light wind was blowing from the southeast and saved the eastern part of town. The total loss is estimated at slightly over $100,000. The insurance will be light.

With its 100 pounds of ballast, it weighs 146 pounds. The start was made from the Old Maid of the Mist landing, below the falls. Graham was bruised about the elbows and knees but otherwise was uninjured.

Railroad Tied Up.

Eagle Pass, Tex., July 16.—The engineers and firemen on the International railroad have resigned and business on that road is now suspended. The trainmen requested an advance of wages and it was refused, which is the cause of their action. There is no concerted strike, but all the men are out. The road is a Southern Pacific property and the men are paid in Mexican money and this has greatly depreciated in value, cutting down their wages.

When Did Robbery Occur.

San Francisco, July 16.—Safe Expert Walz has discovered that the time lock on the cashier's vault in the mint from which $30,000 was stolen, does not operate and has been out of order for an indefinite time. This has broadened the scope of the investigation by secret service men, as it is apparent robbery may have occurred at any time between 3 p. m. and 9 o'clock the following morning.

MAY SOON RETURN

FOREIGN TROOPS MAY AGAIN BE REQUIRED IN THE CHINESE CAPITAL.

TROUBLE IN THE NEAR FUTURE

According to Officers the Outlook Is Not Bright — Gen. Gaselee, Who Commanded the British Indian Troops in Pekin, Leaves for Home —Elaborate Plans to Hoodwink the Emperor.

Pekin, July 16. — Gen. Gaselee, who commanded the British Indian troops here, left yesterday en route to England, traveling by way of Japan, Canada and the United States. There was a special guard of American, German, Italian and Japanese troops at the station and also a number of Chinese police. The presence of the latter was an unusual occurrence. Part of Gen. Gaselee's staff will remain at Tien-tsin with Gen. O'Moore Creagh, who will succeed Gen. Gaselee. The latter, when he arrives in London, will make a personal report of the military and political situations. His direction of the movements of the Indian troops was guarded, prudent, safe and diplomatic, he following the British policy in that he was neither excessively lenient, like the Americans, nor severe like the Germans. Many officers anticipate that troubles in the near future will necessitate the return of foreign troops. Col. Alexander of the Sixteenth Bengal Lancers is now in command of the British troops in Pekin. The Sixteenth Bengal Lancers, the Seventh Rajputs, and the Welsh Fusiliers will leave about the middle of August. Only 250 troops will be left as a legation guard.

To Fool the Emperor.

The Chinese officials are making elaborate preparations to save the emperor's face when he re-enters Pekin. All evidence of the destruction wrought by the war along the streets to be traversed by the emperor will be temporarily disguised. Great pagodas will be erected. The Chen Men gate, which was nearly demolished by the bombardment, will be repaired with wood and plaster, painted to resemble stone and the damage to the walls and outer buildings will be similarly masked. Li Hung Chang has deferred the withdrawal of the foreign troops from the temples and palace not later than Aug. 15. The ministers of the powers have acquiesced and have notified the commanders of their decision. The Americans and British will probably camp near the summer residences of the legationers in the western hills until their barracks are completed.

STEEPED IN GORE

AUTHOR OF MANY CRIMES IS RUN TO EARTH AT DENVER.

HIS VICTIMS WERE ALL WOMEN

"Jack the Ripper" Is Arrested, but Not Until He Adds Two More Victims to His Already Long List—His Last Victim Was a Young Girl Whom He Assaulted and Fatally Hacked With a Knife.

Denver, July 11.—"Jack the Ripper's" horrible career of murder and mutilation closed Monday night with the lives of Mrs. Armenia A. Bullis and little Jessie Kinport as his final sacrifices. Carl Jensen, his hands dripping with blood, his face distorted with maniacal rage and brandishing an ugly, rusted knife, was arrested late in the night in the city's outskirts not far from where he had killed an old woman and fatally hacked and cut a fourteen-year-old girl. Caught red-handed, almost before his last crimes were discovered, Jensen confessed. He is insane, but this does not lessen the rage of the Denver people against him, and he may be lynched.

Girl Brutally Assaulted.

Jessie Kinport was alone at home when assaulted, her mother, a widow, having gone to the theater with a friend. The man who assaulted the girl gained access to the house through a window. He choked her, cut her in the abdomen and otherwise maltreated her. She was found lying on an ash dump about midnight by searchers after an alarm had been given by her mother who, on returning home, found her child's bed empty and bloodstained.

About an hour before this Policeman Lamber, while walking his beat in a lonely part of the city, came upon a blood-covered man who was brandishing a knife and muttering wildly to himself. He called to the policeman and warned him to come no nearer. Lambert approached quickly, disarmed the man and took him, struggling, to a police station. The prisoner said his name was Jensen.

Found a Mutilated Corpse.

Early yesterday morning the mutilated corpse of Mrs. Bullis, sixty years old, was found near the sidewalk of a deserted street. Three terrible wounds in her breast told the story of her death at the hands of "Jack the Ripper." There was no evidence of a struggle. Confronted with this new discovery Jensen quieted down and confessed both deeds. There is little doubt that Jensen is the fiend who killed several women during the last few months. No apparent motive has been discovered for any of these crimes which have startled Denver by their atrocity, and there seems to have been no cause for Sunday night's acts.

A crowd of several hundred gathered outside of the city jail last night and made threats of lynching Jensen. A report came to the station that a mob was coming from South Denver to take Jensen from the authorities and lynch him. Chief Armstrong decided that Jensen would be safer out of reach and he was taken to Colorado Springs.

FOUND IN SOLDIER RIVER.

Prominent Iowa Merchant Is Supposed to Have Ended a Scandal by Drowning.

Sioux City, Iowa, July 11.—The body of Chris Harm, a prominent merchant of Ute, Iowa, was found in the Soldier river near Ute by small boys. On the night of June 21 Richard Palmer, an ex-banker of Ute, and Mrs. Harm found Harm and Mrs. Palmer together in Harm's store. The affair caused a great sensation on account of the standing of the parties concerned. Palmer sued Harm for $10,000 for alienating his wife's affections. The night of the discovery Harm disappeared. It is now believed he threw himself into the river that night to escape the disgrace. Yesterday Mrs. Harm brought suit for $5,000 against Palmer, charging Palmer and his wife with conspiring to extort money from Harm.

After his arrest Norlin made a full confession and took the officers to a cornfield near his home, where, in a box, was found $6,-775 of the money he had concealed. His total shortage is $10,011. Norlin, at the time of the courthouse fire, said he had been assaulted in his office, robbed and the building fired. He admitted last night this was purely a concoction of his own. He said he lost the remaining money through carelessness.

TWO WERE KILLED.

Passenger Train Crashes Into Rear End of Freight.

Nottingham, Ohio, July 11. — One of the worst wrecks on the Lake Shore road in years occurred in the center of this village, ten miles east of Cleveland. The Southwestern limited on the Big Four from St. Louis, Cincinnati and other Western cities, and which goes onto the Lake Shore tracks at Cleveland, was ditched through collision with a portion of a freight train. Just what caused the wreck is not definitely known, but it is thought a portion of the freight train that had broken in two had rolled onto the passenger tracks. The engineer and a mail clerk were killed.

TURKEY DIGS UP.

America's Claim of $95,000 Is Paid in Cash.

Washington, July 12.—The state department has received the amount of the American indemnity claim against Turkey, $95,000, through the American legation at Constantinople. The money was paid by the Turkish government to Mr. Leishman, our minister at Constantinople; was by him placed in the Ottoman Imperial bank and drafts remitted for the amount. These drafts have just reached Washington. As is always the case, the claims in the aggregate considerably exceed the amount actually paid, but our government has expressed itself satisfied with the payment. It assumes full responsibility for the distribution, the Turkish government paying down the lump sum of $95,000 and leaving it to the state department to distribute this among the claimants at its discretion and after its own fashion.

Thirteen Men Injured, One of Them Fatally.

El Paso, Tex., July 12.—An explosion occurred in the engine room of the Kansas City consolidated smelter company yesterday which set fire to the building, causing a loss of $150,000. Thirteen men employed at the works were injured, one fatally. The fire burned for four hours and was finally extinguished by the local fire department, which was called to the scene. The works are located at a considerable distance from the city. The hot blast was stopped by the breaking of the belt which connected it with the machinery. This caused the gas from the furnace to rush back into the large pipes which were exploded.

Chicago, July 12.—J. W. CROPS ARE RUINED

HOT WINDS AND DROUTH DO GREAT DAMAGE TO GROWING GRAIN.

RESULTS IN BIG JUMP IN PRICES

Alarming Reports From the Corn Belt in Missouri and Kansas—Spring Wheat Is Endangered—The Hot Wave in the Southwest Continues Unabated—Expected to Move Northward.

Chicago, July 14.—Under the pressure of continued alarming reports of drouth in the corn belt of Kansas and Missouri and the probability that instead of abating in the very near future the burning winds will extend northward and make their force felt on the spring wheat crop, prices of all grains and hay on the board of trade yesterday continued to soar skyward.

In nearly all instances the high points recorded were almost record-breakers for prices which have resulted from natural conditions. Wheat advanced 3 cents, corn 2 7-8 cents and oats 1 1-4 cents for September. This took the price to 68 5-8 for wheat, 54 3-8 for corn and 33 for oats. Wheat was affected by the flurry in corn and oats and also by the fact that the cables were 1-2d higher in England, mainly on some bad reports of crop conditions in France and Russia.

May Go Much Higher.

Should the hot spell continue there is no telling where the rising market will go to. Primarily the weather advanced grain prices several points, and to substantiate the reported danger to crops throughout the West and Northwest come the heavy buying orders. Spring wheat is now in a tender stage. While corn probably took the leading place in the grain which is being affected, wheat showed the greatest strength yesterday. No serious damage has resulted to the spring wheat crop up to date as a result of the drouth.

Indications are that not only will the hot, dry spell continue, but that it will move northward and do damage to that grain. Another item, which probably is the principal cause for the remarkable strength shown in wheat now, is that there is so little for sale. This is caused by the probability that, owing to the losses of corn, oats and hay, much wheat will be used for feeding cattle.

Worst Drouth in Forty Years.

Kansas City, July 14. — No rain fell yesterday in any part of the drouth-stricken district, consisting of all of Kansas, Western Missouri, Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Over much of this region yesterday was the worst day of the long hot spell, the temperature being more than 100 degrees and no breeze stirring. Corn, oats, hay and potatoes are so badly injured that even with rain the yield would be short, and as the weather bureau gives no hope of relief the outlook is discouraging. At some places in Kansas there has been no rainfall whatever for nearly three months. The present is the worst drouth since 1860, when New England sent food to the settlers of Kansas.

WARMEST OF THE YEAR.

Heat Records Broken in the Southern States.

Memphis, Tenn., July 14.—Yesterday was the warmest day of the year in the Central Southern states and parts of the Southwest. Many places in West Tennessee, Arkansas, North Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas report that all heat records were broken. In Memphis the official report was 102 degrees at 5 o'clock. It is the highest temperature ever recorded here. At Little Rock the highest temperature ever recorded was officially reported at 4 o'clock when the mercury reached 106 degrees. Notwithstanding the oppressive heat no prostrations occurred there. Pine Bluff reports the warmest day on record, with one fatality. In Mississippi the heat was intense throughout the day. At Jackson, Vicksburg and Natchez all records were broken. Crops, especially corn, all through North and East Mississippi, are drying up and unless copious rains fall soon great damage will result. Louisiana is also in the throes of the hot wave. Shreveport reports the hottest day in its history, the government thermometer registering 99.8 in the afternoon.

Kansas Baked.

Topeka, Kan., July 14.—The weather in Kansas continued very hot yesterday, the highest temperature reported being 110 at Fort Scott. The heat was accompanied by a very light breeze from the south, which came as from a red-hot furnace, blasting and withering vegetation of all kinds.

Three other buildings caught fire and were destroyed, rendering fifty people, mostly negroes, homeless. The German Evangelical church and the Richard Street M. E. Church, the latter one of the finest structures in the city, were also on fire at one time, but were saved. There are numerous threats of damage suits against the city officers who authorized the firing of the hotel.

TERRIFIC STORM.

Two Persons Fatally Injured and Much Damage Done.

McComb, Miss., July 14. — A terrific wind and rainstorm struck this city at 5 p. m. yesterday, fatally injuring two persons, injured more or less seriously four others and blew down and unroofed several small buildings. A game of baseball was in progress at the time, a large crowd being in attendance, and when the storm came the crowd ran for shelter. A party of a dozen took refuge under a gallery, which was blown down a few minutes later, burying the people beneath it and fatally injuring Willie Kuntzmann and a negro named Andrew Johnson, while John Dykes had both legs broken and William Hersog had an arm broken and was badly bruised about the head and shoulders. LOSES A FORTUNE.

Peculiar Misfortune Follows an Old Man.

La Crosse, Wis., July 14. — Conrad Elgert, a prominent farmer residing north of here, was robbed of nearly $1,000 in gold yesterday while at work in the field. He is an old man and his hearing and sight is somewhat impaired by age. He has always been very saving, and accumulated a large fortune, but now he is left penniless. Several years ago he buried part of his money on his farm, which was stolen and never recovered. Then he deposited a sum in the Alma bank, which failed. Yesterday's robbery leaves him a poor man, having lost his entire fortune. Elgert lives alone and is well known throughout this county.

Belle Fourche, S. D., July 14.—Judge Levi McGee of the Seventh judicial circuit has granted bail of $2,500 for William Yokum and he will be released from the county jail here as soon as his friends put up the money. Yokum killed a man about five years ago in this city, for which he received a life sentence in the penitentiary. He was granted a new hearing about a year ago and he has since been in the jail here. He is over fifty years old and in view of the fact that he committed the murder to a considerable extent in self-defense, it is believed by his friends that he will be acquitted in his new trial, which will occur next fall.

MINNESOTA TO BE SOLD.

Famous Old Vessel Has Been Stricken From the Naval Register.

Washington, July 14.—The secretary of the navy has ordered the famous old Minnesota to be stricken from the naval register. A board of condemnation has just appraised her at $15,000 and she will be sold at public auction at Boston, where she now lies. Minnesota is one of the most noted vessels of the old navy. She was built in Washington in 1855 and was the flagship of Admiral Goldsboro in the famous battle between the Merrimac and the Union fleet in Hampton Roads the day before the Monitor arrived.

Accident Induced Insanity.

Beloit, Wis., July 14. — Mrs. Oscar Turney, wife of a conductor, has become a raving maniac from brooding over a grade crossing accident in which two women were killed which she witnessed. Since the accident, whenever a train passed the house she would rush out and shout to the crews to slacken speed. After compelling teamsters to drive slowly by threatening them with a revolver, she was sent to the Mendota asylum.

Engineer Injured.

La Crosse, Wis., July 14.—The Milwaukee passenger train due here at 7:05 yesterday morning did not arrive until 2 p. m., having run into a Northwestern freight at Minnesota Junction, near Portage. MOB OUT FOR GORE

CLAMOR FOR VENGEANCE AGAINST THREE NEGROES WHO ASSAULTED A GIRL.

SQUADS RAID NEGRO QUARTER

Jail Surrounded by a Mob of 2,500 Excited Men and Boys—Crime Was One of the Most Daring Outrages Ever Perpetrated — Pistol Shots Fired, but No One Wounded —Lynching Plan Abandoned.

Kansas City, July 14. — A crowd of 2,500 excited men and boys surrounded the county jail in this city last night, clamoring for vengeance against three negroes who criminally assaulted Miss Grace Davis Wednesday night in a populous and respectable neighborhood. Eight suspects, two of whom have been identified, were held at the jail, but toward midnight six of them were spirited away to the workhouse, leaving the two who had been identified in the jail. Their names are Joseph Roberts and Frank Holland. At midnight an aggressive movement on the part of the mob seemed unlikely, although there had been no diminution in its numbers. The crime for which the negroes are held was one of the ever perpetrated here. Miss Davis and her escort, Vernie Newton, were walking home after having spent the evening at Troost Park. At Nineteenth street and Woodland avenue three negroes sprang upon them from behind. Newton was knocked senseless and Miss Davis was dragged 400 feet into a private park and assaulted. When she recovered consciousness Newton was still insensible. They are both in a critical condition.

Most Daring Outrages

At 12:30 a. m. the mob had taken to beating negroes with whom a quarrel could be provoked and ten black men have been beaten. A number of pistol shots were fired but no one was wounded.

At 1 a. m. the mob seemed to have abandoned its lynching plan. Five hundred men in squads of seventy-five were raiding the negro quarter in the North End, chasing and beating negroes and smashing windows.

MAJ. STRONG IN TROUBLE.

May Be Arrested by Army Officials for Escapade With an Actress.

San Francisco, July 14. — Social and army circles are much wrought up over the escapade of Maj. Putnam Bradlee Strong, son of the former mayor of New York city. Maj. Strong, now under orders for the Philippines, has been staying here several days at a fashionable hotel. Lady Francis Hope, formerly May Yohe, the actress, has also stayed there. Maj. Strong is registered at the Palace hotel under his real name, but at the California hotel he is registered as H. L. Hastings and wife. The "wife" is said to be the former actress whom he brought out here from New York and expected to take her with him to the Philippines. When their identity became known at the California Strong and the actress were requested to leave the hotel. It is understood that the army authorities will take up the case and probably arrest Strong, as he is now in the regular army.

TOSSED BY A BULL.

Several Accidents at Omaha's Festivities.

Omaha, July 14. — Several accidents occurred at the South Omaha festivities last night. During the bull fight a matador was tossed by a bull, having his clothes torn from him and suffering some bruises. At the same arena during a bucking broncho exhibition Alfred Pearson was thrown and badly bruised. He afterwards mounted a wild steer and narrowly escaped death, being sent to the hospital unconscious. Roy Boyd, an aeronaut assistant, was accidentally carried fifty feet in the air and fell to the ground, receiving injuries believed to be fatal.

AS TO REAPPORTIONMENT.

Test May Be Made in North Dakota as to Value of a New Law.

There is much speculation among attorneys and politicians over what effect the supreme court decision, which set aside county lines beyond the Missouri, will have on the reapportionment of the state for legislative purposes. The lines of the legislative districts conformed in many instances, to the county lines, and some hold that the decision obliterating county boundaries also wiped out the newly-created legislative districts. Others assert that as long as the legislative district lines were not uniformly based on the divisions for the counties, the reapportionment will stand.

There are some features developing in the senatorial fight which may make it desirable that the old legislative districts be maintained, and it is among the possibilities that action may be brought to test the matter and set aside the reapportionment. The old number of legislators was much smaller and more easily manipulated than the new one will be, and all kinds of combinations are feared.

Another interesting question has arisen over who shall call the next legislative conventions. In some districts two, and even three new ones were created, and it will be manifestly impossible for the old legislative committees to act officially. It has been suggested that uniform action should be taken, and the power to call the meetings should revert to the county central committees in all districts where there have been changes.

FARGO'S SEWERS INADEQUATE.

System on the South Side May Have to Be Reinforced.

The recent heavy rains have demonstrated the fact that the Fargo sewerage system, on the South side, is inadequate to carry away the surface water. In many parts of the city the sewers were filled so rapidly that water stood in cellars to the depth of several feet. Surface water out in the residence districts stood on the streets several hours before the sewers could carry it off. Mayor Johnson has recommended the building of two or three lateral sewers of sufficient volume to provide against any emergency that may arise. The large sewer on the North side has proven its value, and property-owners on the other side of the city are interested.

C. A. Pettibone, the directory man, is distributing his new books at Fargo, and, according to the regular computation, Fargo has a population of 11,667 and Moorhead 4,010, making 15,677 for the two towns. This shows a satisfactory increase in each during the past year.

The Cass county summer school is in full blast with a large attendance. Prof. McArdle, the conductor, is aided by an able corps of assistants, and the work of the four weeks has been carefully mapped out.

OFFICE OR CONTRACT.

Jamestown Alderman May Have to Give Up One or the Other.

Proceedings will be brought to oust John N. Canham as a member of the Jamestown city council. Mr. Canham recently purchased the lighting plant of the Jamestown Electric Light company, and has a contract to furnish the city with electric light and water. It is claimed that a contract of this kind debars him from being an alderman. A fight is being made on him by John Masters, formerly manager of the Jamestown Electric Light company, who is attempting to secure a franchise for the Citizens' Electric Light company, a new organization.

In district court at Jamestown Frank Pearson of Medina was acquitted on a charge of grand larceny, made by the Northern Pacific Railway company.

The ten-days' session by the Seventh Day Adventists of the state has been concluded, and the members, most of whom drove overland, have left for their homes. Twenty-five persons were baptized in the James river. It was decided to appoint a resident pastor for the Jamestown church, and Rev. C. E. Christianson of Owatonna was given the place.

CHICKENS WILL BE SCARCE.

Experts Think Rains Have Drowned Out Many.

On account of the excessive rains this summer, sportsmen say that chicken-shooting will be poor this fall. In some sections where the land was all low, it is claimed that practically all the birds have been killed. The hill and ridge sections not in the valley proper, will be the favorite spots, and many hunters are already planning trips to the hills in Ransom county and further west. The indications are that the duck crop will be the greatest ever, and even if chickens should be scarce, there will be sport for all. The fact that the season does not begin this year till Sept. 1 is a serious handicap to many of the anxious ones.

FEAR EXCESS OF RAIN.

Farmers from the section west of Mayville, in Eastern Steele county, report wheat as looking better than almost ever at this season. The land there is much more sandy than is the black "gumbo" land of the valley, and the excessively heavy and continuous rains of the past month have been favorable to a strong growth there. In the valley much harm seems likely to ensue from the great excess of rain. The fields in some sections are literal marshes, and the wheat is being drowned out.

Homer E. Sargent Estate.

Letters of administration have been asked for at Fargo by John R. W. Sargent of St. Paul on the estate of his brother, Homer E. Sargent, formerly general manager of the Northern Pacific. There is a lot of land belonging to the estate in Cass, Barnes, LaMoure and Ransom counties.

The Fargo board of education has fixed the levy for the present year at $45,000.

Baden-Powell Is Ill.

London, July 16.—Gen. Baden-Powell, the Times announces, is suffering from overwork and fever and his medical advisers in South Africa have ordered him to take a complete rest and proceed to England.

FAITH of the CHILD

I.
Little one, my little one,
When first you walked alone,
With eager trust you kept your hands
Held out to grasp my own—
Toward me was bent each step you took,
And by your anxious, pleading look
Your faith was sweetly shown.

II.
Little one, my little one,
Since you are larger grown,
Forgetting to depend on me,
You run about alone—
Yet when your little troubles rise
Ah, you return with tearful eyes,
And my protection own.

III.
Little one, my little one,
In weakness I am prone
To crave His guidance, to depend
Upon His love alone—
But when my step grows firm I let
My faith lie sleeping and forget
All glory save my own.

IV.
Little one, my little one,
Your childish ways have shown
That I am weak, that I am still
A child, though larger grown;
In weal I boldly cope with men,
In woe I turn to Him again,
Afraid to walk alone.

Journal of a Contented Woman.

BY SARAH ROGERS.

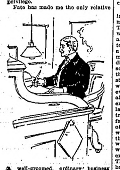
(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

November 1—I have decided today to become contented, whatever my earthly lot. I have been so discontented lately that any change will be welcome. And has not Shakespeare said:

My crown is in my heart, not on my head;
Not deck'd with diamonds and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen—my crown is call'd content;
A crown it is that seldom kings enjoy.

So I am going to be contented and wear my unseen crown upon my heart, knowing that few kings enjoy a like privilege.

Fate has made me the only relative of a business brother. Now at the very start in order to explain, if not justify my discontent, this is not in the least what I should have apportioned for myself. I am not even determined that I should have selected a brother as a solitary relative, but if I had, he should have been a distinguished, university bred person, cultured to his finger-tips and president of Harvard, no less, and given to entertaining the greatest litterateurs of the day. What Destiny has chosen for me in the shape of Tom is a handsome, well-groomed, ordinary business man, devoted to the manufacture of silver-plated tableware. The Creighton knives and spoons and forks are the best in the market, as Tom is certainly the very dearest fellow in the world, even though I say I should not have selected him for a brother if I were ordering one. Nor would I have chosen Orton as a place of residence, preferring rather to reside at Cambridge with my presidential brother.



A well-groomed, ordinary business man.

Orton is a mass of factory chimneys which spell out the word commerce every day in the week except Sunday. I have never seen Cambridge, but I imagine it a cloistered, ivy-clad colony of ancient buildings faithfully guarding all the traditions of culture.

And so here is the problem which Destiny has set me, and which I can solve only by putting my invisible crown firmly on my heart.

Orton has one salient advantage; being given over to commerce, it is commercially situated; it is a seaport town. There is a distinct profit for a person who loves sunsets and moon-rises; for a bit out of the town where the factories have not yet penetrated there is a superb stretch between the salt meadows and the sea. One can walk directly into the very heart of the sunset—the changing, mysterious heart of the sunset which has always had a strange fascination for me. What a wonderful picture I saw there the other evening as I took my solitary stroll along the "loud-sounding" sea! It was extreme low tide, and the sand flats lay in long, dark-brown reaches amidst tranquil pools of water which reflected faithfully the thousand brilliant colors of the west. Far out at sea the waves were breaking in a white line against the dark, sharp lines of the sand. A wholesome tang of salt was in the air, which blew in freshly across the wide expanse of delicate sapphire-tinted sea. The sun had disappeared behind a bank of rose-colored cloud, and no words of mine can express the glorious symphony of golds and purples and scarlets and pale-green and radiant blues, which changed and deepened and brightened in the sky, and threw itself deep down into the peaceful beauty of the salt pools, among the long stretches of black sand. Such things must be seen to be appreciated, but no one can look upon such divine loveliness without becoming a better man, I felt as if I had been in church and had heard the angels singing. When the last triumphant note of color had died away in the deep sky and night was settling down tranquilly over the sea and the meadows, I turned back again toward Orton with a feeling that my crown was very firmly lodged upon my heart, and that all Orton couldn't shake it off.

All Orton was probably too busy to try. The factory chimneys were all standing thick and tall and black against the opal sky exactly as I had last seen them when I turned my back upon them for the sunset and forgot them. Little golden tails of fire were flickering and darting from their mouths, and I felt a great and sudden compassion for the thousand toiling men and women who were there at work in those grim, gaunt buildings, so far away from the glories of the sunset. I felt all the sorrier because I knew if by some sudden caprice on the part of the boss a holiday might be theirs, they would not waste it in tamely walking along the meadows by the sea at sunset, but would fly to the bargain-counter among the haunts of men. What would they do with my leisure, my well-to-doness, my certainty of an excellent dinner at the end of my long walk, my solitude, my books, my thoughts? Not one of my beloved ideas would they adopt, and as I looked at the thousand dancing little tongues of flame I seemed to see the toil and sorrow and loss of all those who were less fortunate than I, but who would never know it, and the lust for gold seemed to write itself all over the sky in those flickering flames, and to cry down the glorious wonder of the great sun which had set.

The "loud-sounding sea."

I felt of my crown in order to make quite certain that it was still in my heart, and then I fell into line between the rows of prosaic houses and went prosaically home to dinner. It is so much easier to be prosaic when the sun has gone down and darkness is upon the land, so I was not so shocked as I might have been when Tom told me triumphantly that the silver business was booming awfully, and that an order for three thousand spoons had just come in from Chicago.

Japs Find a New Island.

According to the Japan Times a new island has been discovered in the Sea of Japan. From a statement appearing in the Nichi Nichi it appears that the island is situated at a point between Ul-long-do Island, off Korea, and the Oki Archipelago, off the coasts of the San-in-do, the distance from either s. o being 30 miles. No maps ever published contain any reference to the island, which is reported to be about two miles in length and about the same in breadth. It was about a year or two ago that the island was first discovered by a fisherman of Kyushu, who found the waters in its neighborhood full of sea horses.

New England Famous for Tobacco.

There are in the United States 700,000 acres of land devoted to tobacco, of which 1,000 acres are in New England. The annual yield of all kinds in the country is about 500,000,000 pounds, of which New England raises 10,000,000. The average yield per acre throughout the country is 700 pounds, but in New England it is 1,700 pounds. It is interesting that all the tobacco raised in the country belongs to two or three botanical species, yet there are more than sixty varieties grown commercially—all of them quite distinct in shape, color and quality of leaf.—Harper's Weekly.

The Cocoa Bean.

According to a government publication, the cocoa bean from which chocolate is manufactured is produced in its finest form in the republic of Venezuela, though various other parts of Central and South America grow and export large quantities. Two crops of the bean are gathered each year, and the manufacture consists simply in grinding up the beans into a meal and then adding sugar and arrowroot, with the necessary flavor—generally vanilla or cinnamon. The mass is then moistened until it is in a semi-fluid state, after which it is run into molds of the proper shape.

Balloon Goes Up 38,000 Feet.

Teisserenc de Bort, the French aeronaut, has secured the lowest temperature mark on record—73 degrees centigrade, or 97.6 degrees Fahrenheit. The reading was registered on a thermometer in a trial balloon sent up recently, which rose to a height of 38,000 feet.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

How to Sell Fruit.

R. M. Kellogg, the well-known fruit-grower of Michigan, writing in his annual catalogue on the way to sell fruit, says:

Never give the market a thought until the berries are ready but spend your time growing such a grade of fruit that customers will wait for your coming. You will not have to run around to drum up trade.

If your fruit is right you will not have any trouble in arranging with the leading dealer to handle all you have. Get a neat circular letter printed describing your berries and have one left with every family who is a customer of your dealer, telling them where they can be had. Have notices put in the papers to the same effect. Pack your fruit honestly in a nice, clean box and don't forget to put some big berries in the bottom. The people will find them and give you a good deal of credit. If you ship to a distant city secure a reliable dealer in the same way and have a neat stencil or label which shall act as a trademark, so that people will become accustomed to it and insist on having your brand. You will have no occasion to make consignments to a commission house but will be put to your wits' end to get enough fruit to supply regular customers.

If you are so fortunate as to have common fruit, do as the other fellow does: sell it for what it will bring but never put your name on it so that people shall find out that it came from your establishment. A good reputation is a splendid stock in trade. It gives you the advantage on the market and causes people to pass by the other growers and patronize you. Have a neat letter head and bill head to use when you have occasion to write to a customer or present a bill. Take pride in your business and do business in a business-like way. I have made most money selling direct to private families. I never failed to secure for customers nearly every family on all the principal streets. Other growers would tag around after me and offer my customers their berries for two or three cents less per quart, but I paid no attention to them.

Always insist on a fair price and back it up by a comparison of values and you will have no trouble in getting and holding customers. Be firm and courteous under all circumstances; don't get angry if they do quit you, but express your regrets and leave them in a mood in which they can come back without prejudice. It costs nothing and it is pleasant to be known as a gentleman with whom everybody likes to deal. Don't cut prices but look up new customers if you have a surplus of fruit. Don't peddle indiscriminately from house to house but have regular customers whom you supply daily.

Insist on a good price for fancy fruit and you will always get it. You will rarely or never lose a customer, but you will keep on getting more patronage as the quality of your fruit becomes known. Nine-tenths of the people will buy the best fruit they can get, and a reasonably high price cuts no figure if they can only know where to get a regular supply. Any groceryman will tell you he always sells his fancy fruit first and the low grades last. The word goes from one family to another and to their friends in distant towns, where families will club together and have several bushels shipped daily by express and divide them among themselves. I have always had a large trade of this kind.

When selling one kind of fruit engage the next coming on, so as to have everything sold in advance. You will soon find all your time occupied in selling fruit and directing work, and you can hire the drudgery done by people of less enterprise. Pay your men good wages, so they will prize their places, but let them understand that everything depends on first-class, careful work. When they see the drones being weeded out they will take the hint; and don't forget the worst use you can make of a man is to quarrel with him and call him hard names. Just say to him kindly that his services are no longer needed, and let him go. A neat personal appearance is a good stock in trade. Wear a good business suit and keep your shoes blacked, and be in condition to approach a wealthy family and make a good impression, and never offer a customer berries in an old dirty box. Keep your wagon as neat and attractive as possible.

Thin vs. Thick Corn Planting.

How thick should corn be planted when it is to be used for ensilage? This question is of considerable importance, as the thickness of planting has a direct bearing on the yield possible. No absolute rule can be given that will suit all soils, since it is evident that light and heavy soils will behave differently, and that difference of fertilization also has much to do with the result.

At the New Jersey Experiment Station last year one acre of ground was divided into one-fourth acre plots and planted to Southern White corn, June 8th. The corn was planted in drills on all of the plots, the drills being three feet and six inches apart.

Plot 1 was planted at the rate of six quarts of corn per acre. The stalks stood ten inches apart in the drill.

Plot 2 at the rate of five quarts per acre, the stalks standing twelve inches apart.

Plot 3 at the rate of four quarts per acre, with stalks fourteen inches apart.

Plot 4 at the rate of three quarts per acre, with stalks sixteen inches apart.

The results were entirely in favor of the thicker plantings. The yield of silage corn on plot 1 was at the rate of 9.03 tons per acre; on plot 2 it was at the rate of 7.79 tons per acre; on plot 3 it was at the rate of 7.49 tons to the acre; and on plot 4 at the rate of 7.48 tons per acre.

It was noticed on plot 1, where the corn was planted the thickest, that it took the moisture from the soil more rapidly and suffered more from the drouth than the other plots. The ears were also noticeably smaller on plots 1 and 2, where the corn was planted thickly than on the more thinly seeded plots. The experimenters express the opinion that the thickest planting is the most profitable for silage corn.

We are sure that some of our siloists will disagree with the above, but know also that others will sustain the conclusions reached. Some want to grow a goodly proportion of grain with the stalks and such will plant at wider distances. On the other hand, the writer once heard H. B. Gurler remark that he intended to plant closer and raise only stalks, finding it more profitable to buy the grain needed than to raise it, taking into consideration his increasing necessities for silage.

Broad or Windsor Bean.

(Vicia faba).

This is the "bean of history," or that which was earlier cultivated. This bean grows erect, about 2½ feet high, has a square, reddish stem, and the leaves are made up of oval leaflets. The pods are broad, thicker at the end and generally curved and pendent, containing thickish, bulging seeds. Several varieties are grown in Europe both for fodder and for human food, but it does not continue as long in bearing as other beans. It is said to be more generally eaten there by the poor than by the wealthy, but, as it has a distinct and agreeable flavor of its own, quite different from the kidney bean, it should be better known among us. It is gathered when full grown, but unripe, as it is then best flavored. The Broad Windsor is perhaps the best known of the cultivated varieties, but it is less successfully grown in the United States than in Europe, the climate being apparently unsuited to its best development. It is imported to some extent in exchange for varieties grown here.

Defrosting of Meat.

In the foreign meat trade great interest is being manifested just now in the discovery of a new method of defrosting meat. As everyone knows, meat which has been preserved by freezing invariably presents a flabby and washed-out appearance on being thawed by the ordinary process, but by the new method discovered by Mr. A. H. Chapman, sheep farmer, of Kurow, the defrosted meat presents quite as fresh an appearance as the fresh meat which has never been frosted. The new process consists in wrapping up the meat in a waterproof and airtight canvas while the carcass is being thawed, and this method is said to be altogether successful in preventing the loss of freshness, which always results when frozen meat is thawed in the ordinary way. It is estimated that at present thirty tons of chilled and frozen meat are consumed weekly in Edinburg alone. It is therefore easy to see the huge possibilities that there are for any perfected system which will bring over the meat in better condition than can be done at present.—North British Agriculturist.

Brick Preserves.

The Australians, it appears, are putting up fruit preserves in the form of bricks, and the United States Agricultural department has become interested in the subject, as it is believed that in a country, especially in California, where fruit is so plentiful, that a vast industry can be developed in preserves put up in this form. The process consists simply in compressing fruit-pulp into bricks and wrapping them in oil paper or other similar substance that will keep out the moisture. The method has the advantage of doing away with glass or tin packages which are necessary in liquid preserves. It is also hoped that the brick preserves can be made to taste like fresh fruit, but complete success has not yet been attained in this respect.

The heaviest precious stone is the zircon, which is four and one-half times heavier than an equal quantity of water. The lightest is the opal, only twice as heavy as water.

The Goat Business.

The common conception of the goat business is doubtless derived from the comic papers which depict the festive animal masticating tin cans and theatrical posters or butting furiously in life or pictured upon a bock beer sign. But there is a serious side to the business and it is, of course, that phase of the question in which the Farmers' Review is interested. Great regions once covered with dense forests of pine, fir and hemlock—denuded of their wealth of trees by man or the ravages of forest fires—are fast being settled by pioneers from abroad whose arduous duty it is to clear such lands from second growth scrub and woods after the remaining timber has been removed. To such men the goat now "comes as a boon and a blessing." It supplies him with milk that doctors consider the very best substitute for mother's milk for infants, so rich yet easily digested is it; it revels in green herbs and tender twigs thus utilizing as food the very things the pioneer desires to get rid of; it produces annually three or four pounds of silky mohair which sells for two or three times the price of wool, does not require washing and is ready to spin without special preparation; its skin is in demand for mats and rugs and furnishes the choicest of lap robes for the baby's carriages; its flesh is nutritious and when young, as tender as spring lamb; it is docile and wonderfully tame when hand fed; it is much more healthy than any other domesticated animal; it does not suffer from tuberculosis, hence there is no fear in using its milk for infants; it usually brings forth two kids each year and is cheaply and easily raised and fed. So it will be seen that the goat is bound to have its place in the agricultural industry of the country and already it has taken an important position in California, Mexico and southwestern sections of our country. At the present time there is a widespread desire for information upon this subject from men who are settling the lands of northern Wisconsin and are investigating the virtues of the goat as a brush clearer while at the same time breeders of Angora goats in other parts of the country are looking for cheap feed on rough lands for the maintenance of their flocks for the production of pelts and mohair. It can readily be understood that for poor families settling in wild districts where cows cannot well be kept, and indeed having scant funds for the purchase of cows, the goat, capable of picking up its living, costing but from $6 to $15, and producing from two to four pints of cream-like milk per diem, to say nothing of valuable mohair and tender kid flesh, must be considered a most suitable and desirable animal. So great has the demand for goats already become in the west that buyers are now collecting large flocks in California and Mexico for shipment to Iowa and other states where dealers have engaged in the goat supply business and there is good reason for predicting that for many years to come there will be real profit in the business of local production of goats for the express rates are so high that shipping from California makes the price of the animal somewhat too high for the purses of poor folk. The Angora goat is strong of constitution and absolutely healthy and we consider the business to have a healthy, sensible foundation and excuse. Taking everything into consideration we are therefore free to advise the breeding of goats on all suitable lands and think that many a farm boy would find pleasure and profit from embarking in the business on a small scale. If after further investigation of the subject he agrees with us then let him go it!

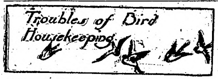
Improving the Seed Corn.

The Illinois Seed Corn Breeders' Association takes pride in pointing to its record of one year from its primary organization. From the moment of its first meeting it has constantly kept before the farmer everywhere and in every way the importance of improving the Seed Corn of the state. By presenting the matter before the various Farmers' Institute meetings and at all gatherings of the Live Stock men the interest in this respect has been greatly awakened and today no subject is more strongly fixed in the mind of the corn growers than the necessity of the improvement in seed corn. We believe there is no matter of greater importance before us than the Breeding of Corn for Seed and Feed Purposes. Since it is well known that all the available corn land is now under cultivation, that we have not in ten years materially increased the yield and have not at all increased the quality, and that against this fact that in ten years corn products have greatly increased and exports of corn from 31,000,000 bushels in 1891 to 210,000,000 in 1900. We must raise more bushels and better quality per acre if we are to keep up with the onward march of progress.—F. A. Warner, Secretary-Treasurer.

In his efforts to grow crops the intelligent farmer must ever try to conceive and add to the stock of available plant-food in the soil. The fertility of a soil is measured by its power to produce crops. A soil may have many hundreds of pounds of plant food per acre, and still be unfertile, while another may contain little plant food, but may have that little in an available form and thus be productive, i. e., fertile.

A favorite way of applying wood ashes is as a top dressing to mowing or pasture lands. This encourages the growth of clover and some of the better grasses with a tendency to crowd out inferior kinds of grasses, weeds and moss.

Kangaroo skins to the value of over a million dollars a year are imported from Australia to the United States.



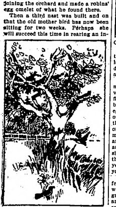
Troubles of Bird Housekeeping

If the average small boy knew what a hard time birds have to rear their families under the best conditions he would hesitate to disturb their nests, even if there was no law to threaten him with punishment if he did so.

There was a patient pair of robins, for instance, who built their first nest more than six weeks ago in a low apple tree in the orchard. Presently there were two blue eggs in the nest. Then came the first catastrophe. Next morning the nest was empty. On the ground under the tree lay one of the eggs with two holes picked in its shell. That was the work of a big, sneaking bluejay, if one may judge by the fact that the same afternoon the robins were seen chasing a scolding jay about the orchard and that the picture of the jay has long been in the birds' rogue gallery.

Immediately after the destruction of their eggs the robins set about building a second nest on another limb of the same tree. They got so far as to have three blue eggs in this prospective cradle when a red squirrel came down one afternoon from the oaks adjoining the orchard and made a robins' egg omelet of what he found there.

Then a third nest was built and on that the old mother bird has now been sitting for two weeks. Perhaps she will succeed this time in rearing an interesting family, but there is an old white cat with three kittens under the hay mow stairs, who spends hours standing motionless, all but the tip of her tail, in the tall orchard glass and who thinks that a dinner of young robins would do her own children much good.



THE ROBINS.

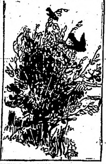
There is a little yellow warbler who built down in the pasture wood lot and who had equally hard luck in a different and really peculiar way.

The yellow warbler's nest was in itself an exquisite thing. It was built near the top of some thick bushes, about five feet from the ground. It was lined with soft, silky gray mosses and threads of vegetable tissue and it looked like the inside of a spun silver cup. It was built so artfully that leaves and branches hid it on all sides, and it took hard work and good luck to find it even after one knew it was there. It was found the day it had been completed, when the mother bird was just ready to begin laying her eggs.

But there was another bird out that day, sneaking through the bushes like a pickpocket, looking for a chance to leave one of its eggs in a newly built nest. The sneak was a cowbird, which never builds a nest of its own and dismisses the whole subject of maternal responsibility from its mind when it has left an egg in some other bird's nest. One of these big brown and black cowbirds found the yellow warbler's dainty little nest and laid one of its big spotted eggs there. Then it flew back to the pasture again, and got down on the ground among the cattle, with others of its sneaking kind.

Sometimes when a yellow warbler finds a cowbird's egg in its nest it will build a false bottom over the egg and proceed to make its nest above it on the second floor. But this poor warbler got no such opportunity. This has been a cold, late spring, and the warblers and other similar birds have been slow in building. Also there were many cowbirds about, looking for a chance to saddle off the hatching and rearing of their young on their betters, and before the yellow warbler mother could get a chance to lay one of her own eggs in the nest she had built it was actually filled almost to overflowing with four big cowbird eggs. This is believed to be the record in the way of cowbird greediness. Often two cowbird eggs are found in the same nest, but rarely if ever have four been found.

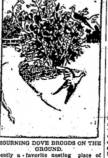
The greed of the cowbird in thus completely occupying the warbler's nest brought its own punishment with it. The warbler, disgusted, abandoned the nest completely. A day or two later something—boy or beast—had discovered the deserted nest and stolen all four of the eggs.



COWBIRDS STOLE THE WHOLE NEST.

If the yellow warbler builds another nest and succeeds in raising its brood where the cowbirds cannot find it the first catastrophe may be all for the best. Even when only one cowbird's egg is laid in a nest and is hatched out with three or four young warblers the latter are likely to get far the worst of it. The young cowbird from the moment it breaks the shell is bigger and greedier than its foster brothers and sisters. It will crowd them to the side and insists on eating much more than its share of the food which the yellow warblers bring for their young.

Across the barbed wire and rail fence from the warbler's nest is a big woods pasture. Close to the fence grow thick clumps of hazel brush and wild crab and plum trees. In some places the thicket is so dense that a man has hard work in forcing his way through it. High up in these tangles, six or eight feet from the ground, two pairs of catbirds have built their nests. They are apparently safe from all but other bird enemies, for the long, sharp thorns and the interlacing branches protect them from attack from the ground. This is evidently a favorite nesting place of theirs, for in the branches there are the ruins of nests evidently two or three years old.



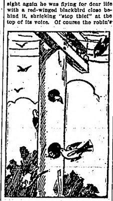
MOURNING DOVE BROODS ON THE GROUND.

Close to the catbird's tangle and lying on the ground in a poor apology for a nest were found a recently hatched mourning dove and a white egg from which the little bird had not yet picked its way. This nest was close to the stalks of some close growing bushes and would never have been discovered if the old mother bird had not gotten up and flown away in a terrible fright when the nestseeker was four or five feet away.

With the instinct of most of the ground building kind the old bird went off with an apparently broken wing and did her best to decoy danger away from her helpless little ones. It is a wonder how these little doves escape the prowling cats which hunt in the meadows and woods all about, but so far they have done finely, and on Saturday last the elder of the two was already able to use his wings in a flight of three or four feet.

Out in an old telephone pole which stands at the corner of two country roads is a regular birds' flat building. About fifteen feet up from the ground, just high enough up to be the despair of small boys, is a small hole leading down to a circular chamber. Here a bluebird family has its home. Five feet up is another and larger hole. This is the front door to the residence of a redheaded woodpecker. At present the young woodpeckers are just getting ready to try their wings and at almost any time one of the youngsters may be seen looking out of the hole at what must seem a strange world. Still higher up, in the third story of the flat building, is another opening evidently made by a flicker, who changed his mind and left before he completed the work. There is likely to be an English sparrow's nest in that cavity before the summer is over, for the "avian rats" are going out into the country for the summer in great numbers and bid fair as soon to be as big a nuisance there as they are now in the city and nearby suburbs.

There seem to be other birds beside the bluejay which sometimes eat or at least destroy the eggs of their fellows. Thus the other day a horrible suspicion was aroused in regard to that symbol of innocence and gentleness, the robin-redbreast. The robin flew from a tree down into the grass of a swamp meadow. There he disappeared for a moment. When he came into sight again he was flying for dear life with a red-winged blackbird close behind it, shrieking "stop thief" at the top of its voice. Of course the robin's intentions may have been perfectly honorable, but why should the redwing be roused to such a sudden pitch of fury at the sight of him asks a writer in the Chicago Tribune.



IN THE BIRD'S FLAT BUILDING.

Russia's White City.

For three months in the winter Archangel, now to become the great western port of Russia, scarcely sees the sun, and for three months in the summer seldom loses sight of it. Yet there is no city in the whole of Europe which lies for so many months—for the greater part of the year, in fact—under a mantle of snow; and because of this the Russian fondly calls it "the White City."

White, too, it is in other ways. All the chief buildings glare with white paint and blink with white blinds. The churches—and in a Russian city they are but few—are also of pure white; only the cupolas are green, and the crosses on their summits gold. And white are the private houses of the better sort—except where Norwegians and Germans live, for buff and blue and red then streak and diaper the pine walls and edge the gable ends. But street-posts, gates, pillars, walls, fences—these are all white. And in the summer, for every official you see in a blue or gray tunic, you see ten in white caps and white uniforms. Bright color alone is left to the women and children; pink blouses, green skirts, scarlet petticoats, orange aprons, and blue kerchiefs are common enough; while a group of children will always look like a cluster of old English flowers. But otherwise, in summer as in winter, this old city of Archangel, now destined to be the capital of a new Russia in the near west, is a White City, indeed.

Her Legal Privileges.

The following allegation in a bill for divorce against a wife was held by the Supreme court at Washington not to state any legal ground for divorce: "She was quarrelsome, vicious in disposition, murderous in threats against the plaintiff and his parents, hysterical and ungovernable in temper, crazy in her actions, and by her causeless and unprovoked boisterousness, screaming, hallooing, and other wild conduct, by day and night, an intolerable nuisance to all her neighbors."

Oldest Church in the Country.

The oldest Protestant church in the United States is St. Luke's, at Smithfield, Va., writes William E. Curtis in the Chicago Record-Herald. St. Luke's was erected in 1632, and was restored in 1894 as nearly as possible to its original condition and appearance. It is a beautiful old structure of early English gothic, with mullioned windows and a stately tower, and has been used for public worship almost continuously for two centuries and a half. The original church erected on Jamestown island by the first English colonists in North America under Captain John Smith—the church in which Pocahontas was baptized and married—has all disappeared, except a picturesque, ivy-clad tower of brick, surrounded by a grove of trees.

Holland Keeps Out Ocean at Bay.

There are at present about 1,000 miles of sea dikes in the Netherlands. The total length of dikes is difficult to estimate, and even if it could be estimated would mean but little, for it must be remembered that the dikes have for the most part in the course of time been destroyed and rebuilt repeatedly. It has not been so much a question of building them as it has been of maintaining them and keeping them where they were. Besides protecting the country from the invasions of both fresh and salt waters, the dikes have served to reclaim no less than 210,000 acres, nearly all of which are good, fertile land.—National Geographic Magazine.

The Witness Scored.

The cross-examiner was a smart man, whose object was to disconcert the witness and discredit his testimony.

"What did you say your name was?" was the first question.

"Michael Doherty."

"Michael Doherty, eh? Now, Doherty, answer this question carefully. Are you a married man?"

"Oi think so; Oi was married."

"So you think because you got married that you are a married man, do you? Now, tell me whom you married."

"Who Oi married? I married a woman."

"Now, don't you know better than to trifle with the court? Of course you married a woman. Did you ever hear of any one marrying a man?"

"Yes, sir. Moi sister did."—London Spare Moments.

As a Last Resort.

"No," said Mr. Walkindell, impatiently, replied the young woman, "I will not marry you. I have told you so a hundred times before."

Wonderful Case in Indiana.

Buck Creek, Ind., July 15th.—Mrs. Elizabeth Rorick of this place had Rheumatism. She says: "All the doctors told me they could do nothing for me." She was very, very bad, and the pain was so great she could not sleep at night.

She used Dodd's Kidney Pills, and she is well and entirely free from pain or any symptom of the Rheumatism.

"Are you still using Dodd's Kidney Pills?" was asked.

"No; I stopped the use of the Pills some time ago, and have not had the slightest return of my old trouble. I am sure I am completely and permanently cured."

Many in Tippecanoe county, who have heard of Mrs. Rorick's case and her cure by Dodd's Kidney Pills, are using the Pills, and all report wonderful results.

PUBLIC FORUM

Ira C. Richardson's Views on School Sites.

There has been so much talk, recently, about our school affairs, that it seems to me only right that an attempt should be made to correct erroneous notions.

Our city charter prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors within 300 feet of a public school. Some have said 500 others 1500 but 300 is right.

As a site for a new school house Block 61 on the river bank, opposite the planing mill, has been proposed. That would be dangerous on account of its proximity to the river; it would face the rear end of a livery stable, and the saloons of Zeh, Juneau, and Voracheck would have to move. But it has been proposed to vacate that short street along the west side of Block 61 and buy Block 92, so as to front on La Bree avenue. It would be very difficult to vacate that street without the consent of Messrs. Brade and Dr. Wisner who have property fronting on it. If they should consent, the school ground would be bought out to the corner of La Bree avenue and 1st; and in addition to removals above mentioned, McGinn and probably Morgan would have to vacate. The selection of that side would cause quite a serious disturbance in property affairs and the site would cost a large sum of money, and the best argument advanced in its favor is that there would be so much noise from the planing mill and saw mill that the large pupils could whisper and the little ones learn to whistle without disturbing their teachers.

Starting with the above site for a basis the present school board turned their eyes westward and some of them thought well of the block where Mr. Mike Schmitz lives; but Ma. Schmitz is farming that block to ducks and does not want to move.

Some would compromise on Block 55 between the City Hall and the duck pond, but acknowledge it would cost considerable to buy off those who have built there and more to grade the block. What a spectacle it would be to see fifty or a hundred children stuck fast in the gumbo in that vicinity.

If you think I am overdrawing the picture just think for a moment about the condition of 1st street from the city hall to the depot in wet weather.

Blocks 64 and 65 are composed of the same kind of soil. It is argued that sewers will dry up the mud; but the sewers in Grand Forks and Crookston fail to do that. After considering the subject carefully, I am unable to find more than one reason for locating a school house west of the city hall. I have looked over all those bushy lots out where no drinking water can be found, that has been dead property on someone's hands for years; and I concluded some man or set of men have conceived the idea of improving that waste by the erection of a fine school house in the midst of it at the expense of our school treasury and inconvenience our children for all the years to come.

It is a heartless scheme but there is business in it for a few.

It is akin to the scheme that placed our depot so far from the business part of town; and it has occurred to me more than once that it is just possible that no member of the school board originated the scheme; and I know some of them who do not favor it.

Why! To buy one of those whole blocks and grade it, to say nothing of sewers, would cost more than it would to move the buildings and buy the remainder of the block where the Central school is located and extend that site to the full size of a perfect block, which would require no sewers or grading, and would be a place where no children would ever get stuck in the mud and all would have as fine drinking water as flows from our city's famous springs.

Besides it is not absolutely necessary to buy the balance of the block.

A building with two school rooms and recitation rooms on first floor and high school room, and more recitation or library or labratory rooms on second floor could be erected on the same ground for $5,000. That is the cost of the Red Lake Falls high school. The old school house and site back of Swenson & Aos' store could and the proceeds invested in the property between Phil Zeh's and Lars Backe's house, and a $2,500 house erected there this year. And as that part of the town increases in population two more rooms could be added so that ward like the third, would have a fine four room house; and all school houses nicely located on sandy ground. And the district for an outlay of $7,500 or $8,000 instead of $15,000 would have ample school accommodations for many years. The plea of a "central location" is countrified. In the country central is the proper adjective for a school house site. In cities, stores and hotels are centrally located and school houses placed just a little ways from the center, and so distributed that children can go home to dinner.

Ira C. Richardson.

Garborg on T. R. F.

Thief River Falls is a city greatly favored by nature. The lumber industry and water power are points in its favor. The scenery, if further aided by art, would be fine. The city is also led by men of intelligence and enterprise. There are, however, two points not favorable—the saloons and the bad roads. These are both injurious to people and horses. No city should have saloons. Every city should do its utmost to have good roads leading to it.

Samuel Garborg.

Chinese Democracy.

The address of the Chinese minister at Philadelphia contained a thought that will be novel to most Americans. Mr. Wu Ting-fang announced that the government of China and the government of the United States rested upon the same foundation—"that the people are sovereign."

It seems a startling idea to those who are accustomed to think of China as the type of despotism, but Mr. Wu gave plausible grounds for it. "The difference between the governments of the two countries," he said, "lives in the manner in which the principle is carried out.

"You believe in the choice of public officers through the ballot box; we believe in the choice of public officers through the examination hall.

"In this country all men are equal at the polls. The chief magistrate of the nation, as well as the lowliest day laborer, has no more than one vote. The most learned scholar of the country, as well as the most ignorant soul who cannot write his own name, has no more than one vote.

"In China we endeavor to attain the same end by a different road. The competitive examination are open to all. At the examinations all candidates stand on the same ground and have an equal chance of success. The son of a minister of state is accorded no more consideration than the son of the humblest tiller of the soil. Indeed, a poor, hard-working student is more apt to pass the examinations successfully than the luxury loving scion of an illustrious house. In this way a certain proportion of the ruling class of the land is drafted at started periods directly from the people."

It looks as if Mr. Wu had made out a very good case for Chinese democracy. If China has some institutions and practices inconsistent with that principle, so have we. If she has her empress dowager we have our bosses and plutocrats If she has cheating in her examinations, we have fraudulent nominating conventions and fraud at the ballot box. On the whole there may not, after all, be much difference between Chinese democracy and that in vogue in some states in this country.—Grand Forks Herald.

The following reply was received: "We most heartily accord with every suggestion that you make, and are perfectly willing to stand or fall by the merits of the entertainment, as judged by the people of our town. WHO PAYS?

Attorney General Gives His Opinion.

Attorney General Douglas gives the following answers asked of him, which will be of interest to the city authorities, who are now allowing numerous bills for the care of small pox patients:

1. Is the county liable for expenses incurred by board of health in control of infectious diseases in a town or village, when such expense was incurred prior to April 11, 1901.

2. In any case under the new law would the county be liable in case the patient was able to pay such expense.

3. Would the county be liable in case the person had not gained a legal residence in the county under the statute?

To the first query the attorney general has grave doubts about the constitutionality of the law, but rules that the towns and villages would have to pay expenses incurred between 1985 and April 11, 1901, and since that date the county would have to pay the bills incurred by local boards of health in control of contagious diseases in their jurisdiction.

In answer to the second question he rules that if able the patient should pay for all supplies used by him, medical attendance, nurses and medicines, and the county is not liable for these unless the remedy against such person has been exhausted. But the expense of preventing the spread of the disease by board of health is not chargeable to the county.

In answer to the third query he replies that if the person is a bona fide resident of the county and is not a pauper, although unable to pay, the county would be chargeable.

The News.

John W. Eastman' Publisher.

The search for frozen birds in a New York city cold storage house, made by the state game inspector, is ended, and it appears that in its course nearly 49,000 birds were discovered, all of which, it is alleged, were killed out of season. Criminal and civil actions are to be brought at once against several persons.

Eugene Field's first poem was discovered recently in the possession of Edgar White, a court stenographer at Macon, Mo. It is entitled "Bucephalus, a Ttail," and is believed to have been written by the author in 1871, when he was a student in the state university. H. W. Burke, a St. Joseph justice of the peace, who worked with Field on the old St. Joseph Gazette, has pronounced the poem genuine.

The Pullman company is arranging to establish a pension system for its entire force of employes, numbering between 12,000 and 15,000 persons. Sixty years will be made the limit of service. For each year an allowance of 1 per cent of the average monthly pay for the last ten months is to be given. Thus, employes who have been with the company forty years, receiving $50 a month, would get 40 per cent of $50, or $20 a month.

Tradition asserts that the Queen of Sheba gave Solomon an intricately pierced stone to thread. He solved the problem by forcing a worm, dragging a thread, to crawl through the winding passage. The modern version is on a manified scale. To test the right of Chicago to call itself a seaport, the steamer Northman, loaded with western grain, timber and machinery, has made the voyage from Chicago to Hamburg by way of the Great Lakes and the Welland canal. The white thread of her wake can harly fail to weave new nd important pattern into the maritime commerce of nations.

A patriotic New Yorker, a member of the Sons of the Revolution, is preparing to give to each of the public school buildings of New York city, a copy of colossal size, of the famous Houdon bust of Washington. The model, made by Wilson MacDonald, one of the oldest sculptors in America, has already been accepted. The public spirited donor believes that love of country should be taught in the schools and that there is no better way of teaching it than by keeping the memory of the greatest patriots fresh in the minds of the pupils. Naturally the Father of his country comes first.

An Indianapolis correspondent calls attention to the part played by the telephone in a recent divorce case at Noblesville, Ind. A Mrs. Nagle brought suit for divorce. On the day appointed for the trial her attorney, Mr. Fippen, could not attend, and called up the Noblesville judge and explained the circumstances, suggesting that the case be tried by telephone. The judge consented the witnesses were sworn, and in answer to questions asked them by Mr. Fippen, thirty miles away, submitted their testimony to the judge, after which Mr. Fippen delivered his argument, talking into the judge's ear by telephone. The divorce was granted.

Dr. N. S. Davis, of Chicago, is called the father of the American medical association, for it was in 1845, while a member of the New York state medical society, that he offered a resolution recommending that a national convention, representing all the medical societies and colleges in the country, be held in New York city in May, 1646. The purpose was to be the adoption of a concerted plan of action for the elevation of the standard of medical education in the United States. The convention resulted in the formation of the American medical society. Dr. Davis is 85 years old, and has been a resident of Chicago since 1849.

The remarks against kissing attributed to Professor Crook of Chicago, prompted B. B. Wilson, a merchant of Mount Hope, Kan., to form an anti-kissing league. A dozen married men were persuaded to become members. The wife of Secretary T. J. Cox, of the league, has revolted and is suing for divorce, after three weeks without kissing, but Cox boasts he has not kissed his wife in many years, maintaining that it is unmanly. The pledge one has to take to join the league is that he will kiss no woman, no matter if she is his wife. "Kissing is for women only—the weaker sex," Wilson says. "Kissing is a weak manner of showing affection. We love our wives more than those men who are all the time kissing them every time they leave the house. Some wives may object, but that will not induce us to desert the cause. My wife is in favor of the plan and looks at it in the same manner as I do."

Paul Wayland Bartlett, the sculptor, who has established his studio in one of the eastern suburbs of Washington, has received a letter from the French government accepting his statue of Lafayette, which is the gift to France of 5,000,000 American school children. Mr. Bartlett's design was the successful one before the American jury, and he was required by the French government to erect his statue in plaster on the site allotted for it in the court of the Louvre, where the French jury finally passed on it.

SETTLEMENT OF THE STRIKE.

Rumors Are in the Air, but the Situation Remains Unchanged.

Pittsburg, July 21.—The strike situation is not materially changed, although many rumors are in the air to the effect that a settlement of the troubler is imminent. Up to a late hour none of these reports has been verified, and the conclusion reached is that no settlement is in sight. At the offices of the Carnegie company and at the headquarters of the Manufacturers the usual silence is preserved concerning the condition of business or the status of the strike. President Shaffer of the Amalgamated association, however, expresses his entire satisfaction with the progress of the battle and says the workers have gained steadily, while the manufacturers have lost continually since last Monday. He says up to the present time the Amalgamated forces contemplate no change in their program, being perfectly satisfied with the showing their people have made. From the storm center at Wellsville comes word that striking mill men in that vicinity spent an uneasy, restless day. There is no longer any doubt that the owners of the Wellsville plant have many of the town's largest merchants back of them in their fight against the workmen, and much bitterness has resulted. Confronted with what seems a certainty that if the present trouble goes along much further the Wellsville plant will be lifted and brought across the line into Pennsylvania, grocers, clothing men and others who for years have received the wages of the mill workers in exchange for goods, are now trying to show strikers that they are wrong and foolish in keeping up the fight. Pressure brought to bear along this line the strikers say is energy wasted, as they are more determined than before.

REGATTA AT PHILADELPHIA.

Honors of the Day Carried Off by Winnipeg.

Philadelphia, July 21.—Under conditions that could not be improved upon the first day's racing of the twenty-ninth annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen were held on the Schuylkill river yesterday afternoon and the initial day's sport was in every way a success. Fine weather, a smooth course and probably the largest crowd that has ever witnessed the first day's event of a national regatta here were the inspiring causes of a good day's racing. All the crews seemed to be in fine condition and several of the events were not won until the flax. Winnipeg carried off the honors, winning two events, while St. Louis, Worcester, Toronto, Philadelphia, Detroit and New York each won one race. The race of the day was that between Detroit and Vesper of Philadelphia, in the senior paired oar event in which the latter won by a nose, and the surprise of the afternoon was the defeat of the Vesper senior four, composed of members of the world's champion crew, by the St. Louis four. Another fine contest was the final in the intermediate eights which was captured by the husky crew from Winnipeg. Ten Eyck and Lewis had no trouble in the senior doubles.

CONSUL STOWE WON'T STAY.

Offers of Increased Compensation Do Not Move Him.

Washington, July 21.—Col. James D. Stowe, United States consul general at Cape Town has cabled to the state department declining the tender of the vice consul generalship there with the privilege of receiving additional compensation from American manufacturers who desire him to remain in South Africa to continue his efforts to extend American trade with that part of the world. Col. Stowe said also in his dispatch that he would not continue even as consul general if permitted to receive the additional $7,000 compensation which the American manufacturers offered to provide.

NEGROES HAD A STRONG ALIBI.

Men Who Narrowly Escaped Lynching Are Discharged.

Kansas City, July 21.—Joseph Robertson and "Bull" Holland, the negroes who came near being lynched last Friday night by a mob of 2,000 people on the supposition that they had assaulted Miss Grace Davis, a twenty-year-old white girl, and attacked her escort, Vernon Newton, were released yesterday for lack of evidence. Justice of the Peace Ross, in discharging the men, said that little credence could be given the statements of Miss Davis and Newton. On the stand both admitted having made misstatements regarding the affair. The negroes set up a strong alibi.

Brained by Convict.

Jeffersonville, Ind July 21. — E. S. McHale, a foreman in the shoe department of the state prison here was fatally beaten yesterday by Lee Kelly, a convict. Kelly brained the foreman with a piece of shafting while some women visitors at the prison looked on. The women were thrown into a panic. McHale was taken to Louisville where a dangerous operation was performed in a final effort to save his life.

New System of Wireless Telegraphy.

Chicago, July 21.—A public test was given last night to a new system of wireless telegraphy. The inventors are Prof. C. E. Freeman, a graduate of Armour Institute, Lee De Forest, a graduate of Yale, and Edwin H. Smythe, telephone engineer of the Western Electric company. The test proved successful.

"French Peas" From Indiana.

Warsaw, Ind., July 21.—Indiana this week completes her annual task of packing "French peas." This year she has put away between 22,000,000 and 24,000,000 cans that will go out to the markets of the world. Between $800,000 and $900,000 will be thus added to the wealth of the state.

Secretary Bracken of the state board of health recently consulted Assistant Attorney General Donahower relative to his power to issue a general order requiring the vaccination of children throughout the state. In the opinion of the assistant attorney general it lies within the power of the state board to issue such an order when any infectious disease reaches the stage of a general epidemic. Mr. Bracken believes that smallpox has reached so nearly the proportions of an epidemic that such a step will be necessary to prevent its further spread. No order requiring a general vaccination has yet been issued by the secretary, but one is expected to appear shortly.

The state drainage board met recently in the office of Gov. Van Sant to consider methods for applying the money appropriated by the last legislature for the drainage of state lands. The commission appointed George Ralph of Crookston engineer of the commission. When he reports for instructions the petitions for aid will be put in form to enable the commission to know how much land it is necessary to drain. Petitions have been received from Aitkin, Norman, Beltrami, Red Lake, Wadena, Marshall, Roseau and Polk counties asking for a share of the $25,000 available this year. The commission has not yet decided whether it will make a personal inspection of the land to be drained.

A number of editors of country journals appeared before the state tax commission at the capitol recently to urge upon that body to increase the allowance to newspapers for the publication of tax lists. The price now is 12 cents per description. The publishers claim some descriptions are so lengthy that the price is much below justifiable rates. Other states pay much more, and the commission is asked to increase the rate in Minnesota. The editors who appeared before the commission included C. F. McDonald of the St. Cloud Times, W. G. Joubert of the Litchfield News-Ledger, Julius Small of the Redwood Gazette, W. G. Hayes of the Sleepy Eye Dispatch and A. N. Dare of the Elk River Star-News.

The state forestry board has instructed the executive committee to appear before the tax commission and request that it recommend in its report that all lands forfeited for delinquent taxes be turned over to the board to be used for forestry purposes. If the board secures these lands and a suitable appropriation from the legislature for the work, it will reforest the land and hold it as a permanent state domain. When the trees have grown to a marketable size the state will then sell them at a proper price and replant the land. The state will then command a growing revenue from its forestry domain.

The forestry board has been trying to get donations of cut-over land for forestry purposes. The board secured the promise of 17,000 acres but, as yet only 1,000 have come into its actual possession. The board instructed the executive committee to procure lists of lands that were turned over to the forestry board under the act passed April 13. This includes all land sold for delinquent taxes prior to 1891 that had not been redeemed or sold and are not agricultural lands.

Assistant State Labor Commissioner Hammond will appear before the statute revision commission in a few days to ask its aid in revising the state labor laws. There are on the statute books, he says, a large number of acts for the protection of labor which, through their erratic construction, are practically void. One of the laws he cites is the ten-hour law passed in 1878 and amended in 1895, making ten hours a full working day. The law says that "any stockholder or overseer, employer, clerk or foreman who shall compel any person or shall permit any child under fourteen years so employed," to labor more than ten hours shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine.

The commissioner has not tried to enforce the law. He has taken the position that no case could be brought into court that would hold, as no employer of labor can compel a man to work for him except under contract. Manufacturers that work their men over the lawful time do not order the men to work; they put it in the form of a request, though the men know that a refusal to work would be likely to mean discharge. Were the wording of the act "permit any person or child under fourteen," Mr. Hammond says the commission could enforce the law.

PLUNGES TO HIS DEATH.

Worried Over Business Matters a St. Paul Printer Suicides.

St. Paul, July 20—A man, supposed to be Warren J. Woodbury, publisher of the Minnesota White Ribboner, the official organ of the W. C. T. U., jumped to his death from the high bridge at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The leap was made at the time scheduled in a letter written by Woodbury to his brother, Albert G. Woodbury. Despondency over business affairs, his relatives say, was probably the cause. The body has not been recovered.

CAPTURES SAFE BLOWERS.

Deputy Sheriff Overhears Conversation and Arrests Them.

Devils Lake, N. D., July 19. —Burglars blew open a safe in Erick Leian's store at Church's Ferry at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, securing all the money and valuables it contained. At 6:30 o'clock Deputy Sheriff Jim Church overheard the burglars in conversation at Leeds and arrested them. At 9 o'clock they were behind the bars. The prisoners gave the names of George Kelly and P. H. Pickett. They were well equipped with keys and safe-robbing tools and had a quantity of nitroglycerine.

HARVESTING BEGINS.

Crops of All Kinds in Fairly Good Condition.

Spring Valley, Minn., July 19.—The excessive hot spell which has hovered about the 100-mark for ten days or more was partially broken yesterday. Harvesting has already begun, forcing the haying work into retirement. But a small acreage of wheat was grown in this section, most of which was ruined by the chinch bug. Barley also has been quite seriously injured by them, leaving for the farmer the smaller half. Oats will show up a better yield than last year.

WILL BE 60,000,000 BUSHELS.

Recent Hot Spell Has Doubtless Had Bad Effect Upon Grain.

St. Paul, July 19.—The wheat crop of Minnesota will be three-fourths of an average crop, or, in round numbers, 60,000,000 bushels. There seems no question that, had the earlier conditions been continued to fulfillment, the Minnesota wheat crop of 1901 would have approached record-breaking figures. The recent rains were not a detriment of themselves, and had they been followed by normal summer weather, would have sustained the expectations of the early spring.

MATE TO QUEEN MARY.

Mrs. Edwin Drake of La Crosse Finds a Pearl Worth $25,000.

La Crosse, Wis., July 18.—Mrs. Edwin Drake, the only professional pearl digger on the Mississippi, found a pearl at Round island which is the exact counterpart to the the Queen Mary pearl, valued at $40,000, found at the same place several years ago. The pearl is valued at $25,000 and was purchased by a local jeweler. It is flesh-colored and weighs seventy-six grains.

HEAT AND MELANCHOLLY

Drives a Farmer Near Luverne to a Suicide's Grave.

Luverne, Minn., July 19.—Unbalanced by heat and despondent over crop prospects Andrew Putnam suicided yesterday morning by drinking carbolic acid while his wife and children were working in the harvest field. "I hope I'll never have to work in the harvest field again," were his last words.

New Masonic Temple.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 18. — D. L. McKinney, E. W. Coughran and A. F. Pilcher, having been appointed a committee for the urpose by the members of the Masonic lodge in this city, have invited bids for the construction of a Masonic temple. This is the first step toward the erection of a building which the Masons propose to put up at a cost of about $25,000.

Youth in Old Age.

Yankton, S. D., July 19.—Doctors of Yankton are interested in a strange phenomenon to which their attention has recently been called. Mrs. John Handy, who is past seventy-five years of age, is cutting a new set of teeth. Her hair, which for many years has been as white as snow, is now being replaced by a new growth which is jet black.

Street Fair and Carnival.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 19. — Sioux Falls will have a street fair and carnival during the first week in October at the same time that the National Farmers' congress is holding its annual meeting here. A committee to arrange for the carnival and street fair will be appointed at a meeting of the citizens to be held in the near future.

Unknown Suicide.

Stillwater, Minn., July 19.—The body of an unknown man was found hanging from a tree on the bluff opposite this city. It is believed the man was from one of the lumber camps and that he committed suicide about six weeks ago. Papers dated May 5 were found in his pocket, but nothing by which to identify him.

Grand Lodge Attendance Large.

Fargo, N. D., July 19—The attendance at the grand lodge session of the Knights of Pythias is large, and unusual interest is shown. The routine work of the session was well disposed of and the officers feel much encouraged. The meeting will conclude with a banquet and theater party.

Loses Both Legs.

Dodge Center, Minn., July 19. — Edward Curtis of Faribault lost both legs in an attempt to board a Chicago Great Western freight here yesterday afternoon. He has a bare chance of recovery.

"CIRCLING" THE EARTH.

IT HAS NEVER BEEN DONE.

No one has yet really made a journey around the world. The course followed by Jules Verne's men and the scores of imitators who have lowered his imaginary record is approximately about 20,000 miles in length. The shortest time for this distance is that made by George Griffith, an Englishman, who accomplished the distance in sixty-four and a half days as an ordinary passenger via Suez and Hongkong.

The only way to make a real trip around the world would be at the equator, where the circumference is 24,855 miles, nearly 5,000 miles longer than the usual route. If any shorter distance is taken the journey might as well be made at the north pole, where Ananias F. Dubbs could stand still and make the circuit of the earth in a second.

How long would it take to girdle the globe at the equator? Some years ago an Italian named Giuletti offered to accomplish the task in three years, provided the necessary funds were found; but nothing came of it. Indeed it is extremely doubtful whether such a feat is within the realms of possibility. The man rash enough to undertake it would spend months in the pestilential basin of the Amazon; would have in crossing Africa, to hew his way for hundreds of miles through the terrible Congo forest, and, finally, would be compelled to cross the great twin islands of Sumatra and Borneo, in a latitude where fever of the deadliest description is everywhere and always epidemic.

How Chinese Use Bibles.

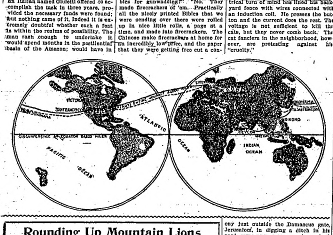
"A few years ago," said a Chicago clergyman, the other day, "there went up a great cry for 'missionelly Bibles' in the Flowery Kingdom. The Bible Society was extremely gratified. The demand was unprecedented, and thousands of dollars were spent in sending them nice red morocco testaments. This sort of thing went on for a long time, but the number of native converts did not increase accordingly. The missionaries investigated. What do you suppose they discovered?" "That they used the Bibles for gunwadding?" "No. They made firecrackers of 'em. Practically all the nicely printed Bibles that we were sending over there were rolled up in nice little rolls, a page at a time, and made into firecrackers. The Chinese make firecrackers at home for an incredibly low price, and the paper that they were getting free cut a considerable figure with them. But it taught us a Celestial lesson, as I might say."—Boston Transcript.

Captains Who Are Naval Officers.

On some of the foreign steamship lines the captains are naval officers and, in case of war, would retain their commands. On the German steamers the officers must first serve a year or so in the naval reserve. On the French line each member of the crew must serve for a time on a vessel of war. On the majority of ships, however, the officers are men of the sea who have fought their way up, step by step, entirely by merit, and not at all by favor. On the American line, even after a man has reached the rank of captain, he must pass a rigid examination every five years.

Voltage for a Feline Chorus.

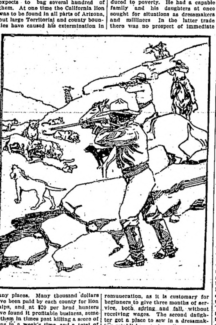
An east Brooklyn man with an electrical turn of mind has lined his backyard fence with wires connected with an induction coil. He presses the button and the current does the rest. The voltage is not sufficient to kill the cats, but they never come back. The cat fanciers in the neighborhood, however, are protesting against his "cruelty."



Rounding Up Mountain Lions

John McCarty, territorial game warden of Arizona, has left Phoenix at the head of a party, equipped for a big roundup of California lions in the San Francisco mountains, about 150 miles north of Flagstaff.

In that country the big cats are to be found in larger numbers than in any locality in Arizona, and the party expects to bag several hundred of them. At one time the California lion was to be found in all parts of Arizona, but large Territorial and county bounties have caused his extermination in many places. Many thousand dollars have been paid by each county for lion scalps, and at $20 per head hunters have found it profitable business, some of them in times past killing a score of lions in a week's time, and a total of over $100,000 has been paid in Arizona for scalps in the last ten years. Hundreds of lions, though, have been shot by cattle, horse, and sheep men who have not claimed the bounties, taking as their rewards the fact that they have disposed of the cause of the slaughter of their calves, colts, and lambs.



While the lions have grown less common in the southern part of the territory, there has been no perceptible decrease in their numbers in the wilder northern regions. Sheepmen in the San Francisco Mountains have complained of late that the lions are killing off their lambs in such numbers that their raids were proving ruinous to the sheep industry. Warden McCarty has taken the matter in hand and organized the hunting party.

How One Woman Managed.

A curious outcome of technical education for women was shown during the past year in the case of a man who by failure in business was reduced to poverty. He had a capable family and his daughters at once sought for situations as dressmakers and milliners. In the latter trade there was no prospect of immediate remuneration, as it is customary for beginners to give three months of service, both spring and fall, without receiving wages. The second daughter got a place to sew in a dressmaking establishment at small wages, and the father's efforts to make a living were hampered by his advanced years. Then the mother took a hand. She had been raised on a farm and sought and found employment tying up vegetables for market. In this industry the chief requisites are careful counting and honesty, early rising and industry. She actually made enough money to keep the family for three months, but then she did not have to spend money to dress up to the situation, and was paid for her work at the end of each day.—Philadelphia Record.

Finds Mosaic Work.

A few weeks since the owner of a little property in a small Jewish colony just outside the Damascus gate, Jerusalem, in digging a ditch in his yard, came upon some mosaic work at about four feet below the surface which, when uncovered as far as permitted by the streets bounding the excavation on two sides and the wall of a house on the third, disclosed an ancient mosaic pavement. Further excavations await the order of the Turkish government, whose officials have taken the site in hand, and which may show the pavement to extend somewhat further in length on one side. The pattern would indicate that the complete width at one end has been uncovered. This mosaic floor is about 220 paces west-northwest of the Damascus gate. The part already uncovered is about 18 feet in length by 11 in breadth. The upper and larger part of the pavement is composed of an exquisite design, including a central panel surrounded by an elaborate frame. The panel has its chief figure, a representation of Orpheus, in a sitting posture, and playing upon an 11-stringed harp. Grouped within the panel are animals and birds, including a serpent and a salamander, which latter two are in an attitude of conflict. The work is assigned to not earlier than the fourth century, and possibly as late as the seventh.

Rarest Egg in the World.

The Otago University Museum at Dunedin, New Zealand, possesses the only complete egg of the enormous bird, the moa, which is now extinct, but which at one time inhabited New Zealand in great numbers. It is the rarest egg in the world. The larger museums of various countries possess skeletons of the bird, but until recently no complete egg had ever been discovered. From time to time bits of shells and parts of eggs were found, but no one had ever seen or heard of a complete egg. In parts of New Zealand dredging for gold is very largely undertaken, and the dredges in many places leave the streams and cut into the bank. In one of these dredges, which was cutting into a bank of auriferous sand and shingle, a workman noticed a big yellow lump, which he took to a turtle floating on the surface of the water. He found that supposed turnip was a large egg. It had apparently been buried for ages, and the contents had entirely dried up, but experts decided that it was an egg of the moa, the only complete one in the world. The bird when full grown was about fourteen feet in height, but none have been seen alive since about the middle of the seventeenth century.

What Struck Him Most.

An exchange tells of an Irishman who after honorable service in India returned to England and found a place as a butler in a country family was telling his experience in battle—the advance, the gallop, the charge, and how, as one rider fell dead from his saddle, the death grip of his fingers on his pistol discharged it and killed his own horse. "What truck you most forcibly when all was over and you looked back to it?" asked a friend.

"Ah," said the old servant reflectively, "I think, sir, that what struck me most forcible, sir, was the bullets that missed me!"

The KETTLE

There's many a house of grandeur,
With turret and tower and dome,
That knows not peace or comfort,
And does not prove a home.
I do not ask for splendor
To crown my daily lot,
But this I ask—a kitchen
Where the kettle's always hot.

If things are not all ship-shape,
I do not fume or fret,
A little clean disorder
Does not my nerves upset,
But one thing is essential,
Or seems so to my thought,
And that's a tidy kitchen,
Where the kettle's always hot.

In my Aunt Hattie's household,
Though skies outside are drear,
Though times are dark and troubled,
You'll always find good cheer,
And in her quaint old kitchen—
The very homiest spot—
The kettle's always singing,
The water's always hot.

And if you have a headache,
Whate'er the hour may be,
There is no tedious waiting
To get your cup of tea.
I don't know how she does it—
Some magic she has caught—
For the kitchen's cool in summer,
Yet the kettle's always hot.

Oh, there's naught else so dreary
In household kingdom found,
As a cold and sullen kettle,
That does not make a sound,
And I think that love is lacking
In the hearts in such a spot,
Or the kettle would be singing
And the water would be hot.

Germination of a Love Affair.

BY GUION P. WILSON.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

I have just come to a knowledge of certain facts which I deem it my imperative duty to make public for two reasons—first, because they clear up the mystery of the disappearance of that great and original investigator, my friend, Professor X. (whose many friends will, after perusing what is here set down, easily recognize him without the mention of his name, which, made in so public a manner, would, I know, be highly offensive to him), and, second, because I hope they will cause some other scientist of prominence to follow up the unique and, I conceive, eminently important line of investigation initiated by Professor X.

I say that I have just come to a knowledge of these facts. This is the exact truth, although the said facts have been in my possession for the past three months. To be plain, just before the Professor disappeared so completely I received through the mail a note from him with a sealed enclosure which his note requested me to open and read three months after it reached me. This I have just done. The enclosure I found to be the Professor's notes upon the progress of a most remarkable and unusual series of experiments founded upon the germ theory. In this connection I wish to say that while, in common with his other friends, I of course know of the Professor's keen interest in this theory, I had had not the slightest hint that he had struck out so boldly in the field of original research.

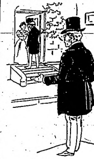
Something has gone wrong.

So radical has been the Professor's departure in these experiments from the beaten track that I have thought it best to give an almost exact reproduction of the notes in my possession, merely editing them and eliminating, as far as possible, the phraseology of the scientist that would be in large measure unintelligible to the layman. I give the notes in the order in which they appear in the book containing them. They were evidently jotted down at different times, but none are dated, though the last was manifestly written immediately before the Professor dropped out of sight.

"I am fascinated. For some time I have been studying those two strongest of human passions—love and hate—and their origin. They are interesting to the investigator if for no other reason than that they set all accepted rules at defiance. Instances are plenty of the manifestation of love where the opposite should, according to the so-called laws of nature, appear. The papers recently noted that a large and venomous snake had killed a setting hen and then carefully hatched and reared her chicks. The killing of their own offspring by animals of many kinds is common. The sentiments of parents toward their children and vice versa are all too often at variance with the rule. How are these facts to be accounted for?"

"As far back as we can trace, love and hate have been known by common consent as matters of the heart. Such things very often have a foundation in fact—why may not this have? And if there is any real connection, may it not, since the heart is merely the forcepump of the blood, lie in the life-fluid itself? And, this granted, might we not go a step further and imagine that there exist germs of the two master passions?"

Here follow numerous entries of so technical a nature that they are quite beyond my understanding. They are evidently notes of the succeeding steps in a very lengthy series of experiments. However interesting they may prove hereafter to a scientist, they need not be inserted here. The latter notes, however, tell of a successful outcome.



I saw J enter.

"I verily believe that I have at last succeeded in isolating the germs of love and hate!" Then is set forth at length the scientific descriptions of these germs, the number of which present in any case, according to the Professor, governs the degree of the sentiment. The notes continue:

"Given a culture of the germ of love in the blood of one animal and another animal inoculated with that culture, the animal so inoculated will love the one whose blood furnished the culture medium. The same is true of the germ of hate. I believe that I have eliminated every possibility of error, but I shall, of course, put my conclusions to further tests."

"A cat in a cage at my elbow is nursing carefully a litter of tiny mice, orphaned by tabby herself. She ate their mother. I have a hawk rearing a brood of chickens. Her motherly affection for them is touching and pronounced. Two dogs, brothers and hitherto the best of friends and merriest of playmates, have, in the past few days, become the bitterest of snarling, snapping enemies. Certainly there seems no doubt of the effectiveness of either serum as applied to animals. How would it affect the human beings?"

"The last lingering doubt is removed! Circumstances made it possible for me to secure a small quantity of the blood of Miss M. (in this, as in all other instances, the names are suppressed for reasons even more obvious than in the case of the Professor himself) in which I made a culture of the microbe of love. With this I inoculated myself, and now, impossible as it would seem to my friends, I find myself madly in love with her. I might counteract this by an inoculation of the opposite germ, but I cannot bring myself to do it. Evidently I am very, very much in love!"

"I have made a horrible discovery. Miss M. does not—and says she can never—love me! Further, though she also says that she will never marry, I am convinced that J. loves her almost as madly as I do! And he has youth, wit, fortune, comeliness—every attribute that could attract a woman—while I"—

"Why should I hesitate? I might, it is true, cease to love her, but I could never forget that I had loved. Fate—it can have been nothing else—has placed in my hands a sufficient quantity of J.'s blood for my purpose and with it I have made a culture of the microbe of dislike, while with my own heart's blood I am preparing the serum of affection. Heaven send an early opportunity to inoculate my darling with them both! I have been under a terrible mental strain and am physically scarcely able to handle my tubes."

"The opportunity has come! I have applied both the preparations to my darling liberally—lavishly! Unless all my science is at fault I shall shortly be a happy man. Poor J.! I feel genuinely sorry for him, yet I cannot reproach myself."

"Something has gone wrong. I called upon Miss M. tonight and was received most frigidly. Indeed, she intimated rather broadly that she expected another guest. Of course, I took the hint and left. From across the street I saw J. enter!"

"Gracious Heaven, what a blunder! I have convinced myself of the cause of it all. In preparing the two cultures with which to inoculate Miss M., in some inexplicable manner I got my microbes mixed!"

"As soon as I have counteracted my own unfortunate inoculation I leave to study the mosquitoes of the Klondike region. Cards are out for the marriage of Miss M. and J. in June."

STOICISM OF THE BOER.

Illustrated in Death of Gen. Delarey's Son at Modder River.

General Delarey, the Boer commandant, who is making another DeWet of himself in the guerrilla warfare in South Africa, is probably the most modern and up-to-date of the Afrikander fighters. He is the officer who engineered the clever capture of the Scots Fusiliers. He is now the main pillar of the dwindling Boer army, and unless stopped by a bullet he will probably be the last to leave the field. For eleven years he sat in the Volksraad, but he was known as the silent man. He rarely spoke except in secret council, and he was warmly opposed to the sending of the ultimatum to Great Britain. He has no love for Kruger. "No good," he says, "can ever come to us until that old man has passed away." He is the one Boer general who refused to accept men who had taken oath of neutrality. He has his own private griefs as well as public ones. His firstborn was killed at Modder river. The incident was Romanesque. The son, a boy of fifteen, was struck by a bullet while at his father's side.

"Are you hit, my boy?" asked the general.

"Yes, father."

They went to the ambulance.

"Does it pain, my boy?"

"Yes, father."

"Are you going to die?"

"Yes, father."

Half an hour later the lad was dead. But Delarey fights on, and at his side is another son, younger, but as brave as the first. One British critic, writing of the war, says that all would have gone well always if there had been more Delarey and less Kruger.—Utica Globe.

ENGLAND WATCHES GERMANY.

Lance Boats of the German Army Cause Suspicion.

At least a real use has been discovered for the lances carried by the European cavalry. In America we don't attach much importance to lances, but in England in the early stages of the war in the Transvaal much was heard of Boers being "spitted" on English lances. In the German army, however, a scheme has been devised by which the lances of the cavalry form a framework for boats. This is such an advanced step that the English are watching closely to see what success attends it. Twelve to sixteen lances and a few cross sticks form the framework for these lance boats, and besides the oars, which are made of a lance and a canvas blade, the only other essential part of the boat is the waterproof covering. It takes only five minutes for the troopers to tie the frame work together and two minutes more to fasten on the cover. Then the boat is ready for launching. Sometimes to insure stability the two boats are fastened together like a catamaran. When these boats are packed up one horse can easily carry two of them. It is said that with the old system it required 3,000 men and 3,500 horses merely to look after the transport of the boats if every squadron in the English army were supplied with two boats, however, only 600 horses are needed, and in the item of fodder alone there is a saving of $137,500 a year.—New York Press.

Pet Lamb Supplants Poodle.

Accustomed as the habitues of the Rialto are to all manner of freaks and strange innovations, the strangest and most unique sight to attract their attention the other day was that of a well dressed man emulating the example of "Mary and her little lamb," says a New York correspondent of the New York Journal. As this latest novelty introducer strolled liesurely along Broadway trailing at his heels was a snow-white lamb, wearing a beautiful collar of leather, studded with silver-top rivets.

Apparently unmindful of the sensation he was causing, the man, who was dressed nattily, walked along, occasionally glancing back to see that his pet was unmolested. The lamb showed plainly that his lambship's necessities were well looked after. White as snow, his fleecy wool glistened in the sunlight, while his plump body gave striking evidence that his meals were not overlooked. Men and women stopped in the walks to look after this contented pair and many were the exclamations from the women of a desire to own a lamb. One well known man about town who saw the living picture was heard to remark: "That's the beginning of the end. In another month one will see numerous women walking in the Rialto with a lamb decked in ribbon bows trotting beside her as a body-guard."

An Old Bell-Ringer.

One of the oldest bell-ringers in England is J. R. Haworth of St. Paul's, London. Mr. Haworth has just celebrated his eightieth birthday. He was an expert in the art on the accession of Queen Victoria, and helped to peal the bells of Westminster Abbey on that occasion. On each recurring June 20, without a break during the queen's reign, he pealed those bells. He was one of the team who rang the bells of St. Paul's not only at the jubilee of 1887 but on the occasion of her late majesty's visit to the cathedral on the diamond jubilee day.

FREE TRADE WITH PORTO RICO.

Proclamation Will Be Issued by the President July 25.

Canton, Ohio, July 21.—Gov. Charles H. Allen of Porto Rico reached Canton from Washington yesterday, attended services at the First M. E. church with the president and spent the remainder of the day at the McKinley home until 10:40 last night, when he left for the East. He goes from here to Washington, thence to his home in Lowell, Mass., and from there he hopes to go to the Maine woods for a vacation. His mission here yesterday was to present to the president the resolution passed by the Porto Rican legislature, providing a system of local taxation for the island such as under the act of congress entitles the island to free trade with the United States. The president's official acknowledgement of the receipt of this resolution will be made July 25, the anniversary of the landing of American troops in Porto Rico, when a proclamation will be issued declaring free trade between the United States and Porto Rico.

"The question of my return to Porto Rico has not been determined," said Gov. Allen. "I went there at the request of the president, and when he is through with me he will doubtless let me know. I have not resigned."

Gov. Allen is well pleased with the conditions in Porto Rico and anticipates a bright future for the island.

DISORDER AND DISTRESS

Likely to Follow the Opening of the Kiowa-Commanche Lands.

Fort Sill, Okla., July 23. — Disorder and distress will, it is feared, follow the actual opening of the Kiowa-Comanche opening on Aug. 6. It is now estimated that fully 150,000 people will have registered for a chance to secure one of the 13,000 claims to be awarded by lottery when the registration booths close on July 26. Thousands of persons now on the reservation who are neither mechanics nor artisans and who have little or no money announce their intention of locating around Lawton if they fail to win a claim. Campers who came in prairie schooners by the thousands generally brought with them provisions sufficient only to last five or ten days. Continued drouth has caused the water to be restricted and for days a hot wind has blown over the prairies and the temperature has averaged over the hundred-mark. With these conditions before them many are already beginning to grumble, and when this is followed by disappointment over failure to draw a lucky number, the hope that bore many up will doubtless give way to more serious conditions.

BOYS IN A RIOT.

Hold Officers Powerless for Over Two Hours.

Indianapolis, July 23. — While 10,000 people were crowding under the trees at Fairview Park last night a riot broke out between the Bigguios, a local crowd of white boys and some colored boys. The whites chased the colored boys into the main pavilion, and when the officers of the park had surrounded them the Bigguios fired several shots and stoned and beat the crowd. The officers were powerless for two hours and called on the governor for a company of militia. Failing to get aid from the governor aid was sought from the sheriff. Charles Daniels, a bystander, was shot through the neck and may die. Two others were badly beaten with clubs and a dozen or more women and children were hit by club and stone. A quarrel between the whites and colored boys caused the riot.

BANDITTI CAUSES DISAFFECTION IN THIRTY DISTRICTS IN CHINA.

CHINESE CANNOT SUPPRESS IT

Troops Show Sympathy for the Lawless Element—Better Armed Than the Soldiers — One Hundred Soldiers and Officers Killed in a Recent Conflict—Complete Pacification Will Be Difficult.

Pekin, July 23. — Disaffection caused by banditti is prevalent in thirty districts in the central part of the province of Chili. The local officials are either disinclined or unable with the force at their command to suppress the troubles. Li Hung Chang, as viceroy, is too busy to attend to provincial matters.

The troops sent against the banditti showed sympathy for them, many of them having formerly been soldiers. They are better armed than the troops. In a recent conflict a hundred soldiers and officers were killed.

The troops of Yuan Shih Kai, governor of Shangtung, are the only ones that can be trusted to act. The result of dispatching some of them to quell the disaffection is not yet known. Even if successful in one district the uprising is likely to occur as soon as they depart for another. Complete pacification will be extremely difficult. Official appeals are constantly reaching Li Hung Chang.

GLARE OF OLD SOL

PREVIOUS HIGH RECORDS FOR HEAT ARE ALL EXCEEDED.

AND THERE IS NO HOPE OF RELIEF

Practically the Entire Country Covered by the Hot Wave—Temperature Line of 100 Degrees Includes the Entire Great Corn Belt—No Indications of Any Relief in Sight—Much Suffering.

Washington, July 23.—A hot wave of unusual, and in places record-breaking intensity, is again prevalent over the central western part of the country, and is spreading eastward and northward. The Central West reported extraordinarily high temperature line, 100 degrees, yesterday, including the States and Territories of Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Missouri, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. Last night at Chicago, at 7 o'clock, the temperature was 100 degrees, exceeding by several degrees anything ever before recorded at that of the day. A serious feature is the showing made in the States of Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, where the temperatures have been 90 degrees or over for a period of over a month. For eighteen days of this time the thermometer at Kansas City registered 100 degrees or more. Weather bureau officials do not care to make any prediction as to the prospects of relief. They say that none as yet is in sight. The seriousness of the situation to the crops is increased by the lack of rain, none of importance having fallen in the corn belt for three days and there apparently being no prospects. The rain which gave a practical relief to the states of the corn belt during the past week was not by any means general in character, but a succession of thunder showers affording temporary relief to the overparched ground and grain. The relative high barometer in the southeast section of the country shows a persistent continuation of warm southerly winds and there appears to be no prospect of a change until the appearance of a high barometer in the Northwest, where a low pressure now has full swing. Such relief of a local character as is held out in the meantime, it is stated, will be due to local thundershowers, which always accompany periods of protracted heat.

Madison, Wis. — Yesterday was the hottest day known to the official record here. The government thermometer at Washburn observatory registered a maximum temperature of 104 degrees.

Burlington, Iowa — Frightful heat prevailed here and all over Southeastern Iowa yesterday. The maximum here was 110, accompanied by a hot wind. Reports from the state show: Chariton, 107; Fairfield, 108; Ottumwa, 110; Murray, 110; Middleton, 113. Corn is reported to be faring badly.

Dubuque, Iowa—All high temperature records dating back forty-eight years were broken yesterday. The maximum was 106. There were a large number of prostrations.

Keokuk, Iowa—The weather bureau station thermometer registered 107 here yesterday afternoon, 3 degrees above the previous record of July 10, and 3 above any previous record for thirty years.

Twin Cities Scorched.

St. Paul, July 23.—Saturday was the hottest day on record in the Twin Cities. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the thermometer registered 101.2 in St. Paul and 101 in Minneapolis. Great suffering resulted, although no casualties were reported. There were a number of prostrations in Minneapolis. Sunday was not so warm. The maximum temperature reached was 96.

Records Broken at Chicago.

Chicago, July 23.—All heat records since the establishment of the weather bureau in Chicago, thirty years ago were broken yesterday, the government thermometer registering 103 degrees. Down on the street it was 3 to 5 degrees hotter, and to add to the suffering, a hot, stifling wind, like a blast from a furnace, blew all day from the southwest. Prostrations were numerous and police ambulances were kept busy taking care of persons who were overcome on the streets.

Day of Prayer in Missouri.

St. Louis, July 23. — Yesterday, the day that Gov. Dockery designated for fasting and prayer to God that the present drouth might be broken in Missouri, all records for hot weather in St. Louis were smashed, the weather bureau thermometer on the customhouse registering 108 degrees in the shade. On the streets and in exposed places the mercury went many degrees higher. The record broken was that of 106, made in the early eighties.

Washington Chat.

Special Correspondence.

An order has been sent from the Indian bureau to Supt. Farr, in charge of the logging operations on Indian reservations, directing him to proceed to Cass lake and rescale logs, about which there has been a controversy. The order was issued upon the request of D. F. Brooks, president of the Scanlon-Gipson Lumber company of Minneapolis, who was in Washington recently entering complaints in regard to the claims set up by the government for green timber cut during the Cass lake operations. It is desired to have a re-examination of logs cut by Lydeck and others.

The reports in regard to the suspension of Supt. Farr from his position in the Indian service are based upon charges sent in private letters to Commissioner Jones affecting the character of Farr. These charges are unaccompanied by proofs, and have not been before the department officially. Farr will be given an opportunity to explain, but pending his version of the matter he will be permitted to go on with the work of his office.

A letter has been received at the department from Farr concerning these charges, but it was not sufficiently explicit. Unless the matter is cleared up, Farr is likely to lose his place when the subject is brought to the attention of Secretary Hitchcock.

Early in September a delegation of Prominent officials will make a tour of the Indian reservations of Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas. Commissioner Jones of the Indian bureau has received a letter from Senator Quarles of Wisconsin, who is chairman of a subcommittee that is to visit the Indian reservations, asking the commissioner to join the committee the first week in September at Milwaukee and go over the Wisconsin reservations.

The trip was mapped out last winter, but the dates were not agreed upon. The object of fixing the time at present is to enable Senator Quarles' committee to join a delegation of representatives who will go upon the Chippewa reservation of Minnesota, especially at Leech lake, for the purpose of investigating the proposed plan of utilizing the reservation for national park purposes.

Several members of the Minnesota Congressional delegation, Chairman Sherman of the Indian committee, and Representatives Cannon of Illinois and Moody of Massachusetts, members of the house appropriations committee, will go with the party. Commissioner Jones has consented to take the trip and go with Senator Quarles and the committee to Minnesota, and later to North Dakota.

The secretary of the interior has authorized the expenditure of a sufficient sum of money, under the direction of the general land office, for making a thorough survey of Wind Cave in South Dakota, with a view to charting the results and producing complete maps of the interior of the cavern. This action was taken upon the strong recommendation of a special agent of the department, who has recently visited the cave and is deeply impressed with its striking features, which, in his opinion, rival the attractions of the Mammoth Cave and the Luray caverns of the East.

Up to the present time but a small portion of Wind Cave has been explored, and it is believed that its examination and charting by the land department will do much toward opening up its unknown recesses and crevasses. There has been considerable pressure from citizens of South Dakota to have this cave explored by the government, and in accordance with this wish a surveying force will be sent out at once.

Secretary Hitchcock has served notice on the cattlemen who are grazing herds in the Black Hills forest reserve, South Dakota, that if they fail to secure permits from Commissioner Hermann by Aug. 1, the cattle will be confiscated by the government.

This action is taken owing to the fact that complaints have been coming into the interior department from legitimate cattlemen, stating that cattlemen without permits have been entering the reservation, grazing their stock and doing considerable damage to the reserve, which those having permits are forced to pay for by the government inspector in the reserve.

There are about 0,000 head of cattle in the reserve, and about one-third of the cattle are in the reserve without a permit.

Judge M. C. Burch, special assistant attorney general, has gone to Michigan for ten days or two weeks. Special Attorney Maynard, who was recently appointed to conduct the suits against Senator Clark and others in Montana for illegal timber entries, is also in Michigan, and it is probable that he will make a report on the indictments recently obtained at Helena. Plans for the conduct of these cases will be matured while Judge Burch is away, and the government will be prepared to push them to judgment when they are called for trial next fall.

Gen. Corbin Makes a Record-Breaking Trip.

Manila, July 18.—The transport Hancock, with Gen. Corbin and party, broke the record from San Francisco to Manila, making the trip in twenty days. The members of the party were delighted with the trip, which was particularly smooth. Gen. Corbin will suggest that Secretary of War Root establish a twenty-five-day mail service between Washington and Manila. It is probable that Gen. Corbin will make a tour of the various islands before he starts on his trip back to the United States.

Thousands of Men Needed to Handle the Enormous Wheat Crop.

RELIC THAT CURES

NEW YORK CHURCH THE SCENE OF SOME WONDERFUL MIRACLES.

CROWDS VIEW RELIC OF ST. ANNE

Five Thousand Persons Kiss the Sacred Relic in the Church of St. Jean Baptiste — Man Suffering From Locomotor Ataxia Feels Confident of Cure—Priest Tells of a Remarkable Cure.

New York, July 23. — A continuous stream of men, women and children poured into the Church of St. Jean Baptiste, in East Seventy-sixth street, all day yesterday for the purpose of viewing the relic of St. Anne, which is now on exhibition there. It is estimated by the priests that more than 5,000 persons kissed the relic during the day.

Late in the afternoon a pale-faced man drove up to the church in a runabout. He was accompanied by two other men. Slowly and painfully the two friends of the sick man helped him to the sidewalk. He was so crippled with locomotor ataxia, apparently that without the services of the companions he would have fallen. They led him down into the crypt where the relic was on exhibition, and made their way to the rail behind which stood gray-haired Canon Petit with the Sacred remnant of St. Anne. When they arrived there the and kissed the case in which the relic is inclosed, and then the canon rubbed it on his stricken limbs. This done, he hobbled slowly back to a pew with his face almost glorious in its faith, and there he prayed and waited for the cure he so longed for. An hour he spent there and then his friends returned for him. When he arose he was still a cripple, but he was not discouraged, for he said that he felt better, and he got back into his carriage apparently satisfied with his visit.

Canon Petit said that in the morning there was really a remarkable cure. He said that a child was brought in by its mother. On one of its legs it wore an iron brace. After the little one kissed the relic and the case bearing had been rubbed on its limbs the mother removed the brace, he said, and the child was able to walk out of the church alone. The feast of St. Anne will occur on July 26 and the relic will be on exhibition in the church until that time.

SITUATION UNCHANGED.

Strikers Say Everything Is Satisfactory to Them.

Pittsburg, July 23. — The important event in the strike history of the day is the organization of the tube millworkers at McKeesport. The word from there is that after long and arduous work Assistant Secretary Tighe of the Amalgamated association succeeded in organizing 173 men of the National Tube Works company. At the meeting twenty-five skilled men from each of the departments were initiated into the mysteries of the Amalgamated association, and Mr. Tighe claims that within forty-eight hours enough more of the workmen will be secured to keep the entire plant closed down, affecting 9,000 men.

From Wellsville nothing has been received here except word that the situation is unchanged and the strikers say everything is satisfactory to them. It is believed, however, that an attempt will be made to-day to put men to work there from other points, the ten men from Vandergrift, who are said to be at East Liverpool ready to go in early in the day being the principal men relied upon for the purpose. While the strikers say they will not commit any overt act there is an uneasy feeling manifest throughout the entire valley, and no one is willing to anticipate the result of the proposed attempt to put these men at work.

When seen last night President Shaffer expressed himself as being more than satisfied with the week's result.

SERIOUS CONFLICT EXPECTED.

Revenue Officers Go Into a Wild Country After Moonshiners.

Nashville, Tenn., July 23. — Reports from Monterey, Tenn., near which place an internal revenue raiding party was ambuscaded by moonshiners Saturday morning say excitement in that district is at a high pitch. The natives seem to have generally sided with the moonshiners and Collector Bell deemed it advisable to take his posse to Cookeville to await the reinforcements which leave here this moring. Every deputy collector and deputy marshal in the district has been summoned to join in the raid which is contemplated. The moonshiners have boasted they will not be taken alive, and as they are well armed and fortified in the mountains, a serious conflict is expected. The force will invade a wild country, inhabited by hardy and desperate people, almost universally hostile to the "revenue men" on general principles.

DISCOURAGES DIVORCES.

Criminal Prosecution Is to Follow Violations of Any Law.

Richmond, Va., July 23. — Rev. Dr. Richard McIlwaine offered a resolution in the constitutional convention which, if engrafted in the organic law of the state, will have a far-reaching effect on the subject of divorces. It makes the commonwealth a party in all divorce cases, and provides for the prosecution of either party to such proceedings if it be shown that they have been guilty of any offense.

KANSAS DROUTH BROKEN.

Corn Yield of at Least 50,000,000 Bushels Now Assured.

Topeka, Kan., July 19. — The rains that have fallen in Kansas Tuesday night and yesterday have practically assured a corn crop of at least 50,000,000 bushels, and the yield may even be greater. The state is under the influence of a low barometric condition, and more rain is expected. Correspondents from numerous Kansas towns in reporting rains say the sky is overcast with clouds and that more rain within a few hours is certain. The drouth in Kansas has been broken and with it has gone the excessive hot spell. It is the opinion of those who have been watching the weather conditions that the season will be more favorable to crops from now on. Secretary Coburn of the Kansas board of agriculture is enthusiastic over the result of the rain. He is sure that the corn will yield at least half a crop if the present very favorable weather conditions continue.

RAINS IN WISCONSIN.

Worth Thousands of Dollars to Farmers of the State.

Milwaukee, July 19—Rains which will benefit the farmers of Wisconsin many thousands of dollars were general throughout the state yesterday. They came in time to save crops which were threatened with ruin as a reason of the protracted period of intense heat, while in Milwaukee and vicinity they were welcomed as a blessing which days of stifling heat served to emphasize. Reports of heavy showers and tempestuous downpours were received last evening from nearly every section of Wisconsin from Pierce county in the north to Dane county in the south, while La Crosse and surrounding districts shared in the benefits which the much-needed rainstorms brought.

CHICAGO A SEAPORT.

Chicago, July 19. — The steamship Northwestern, the first boat of a regular line to make the trip from Chicago to Europe and return, entered the harbor here yesterday amid a deafening salute from other craft. The round trip took eighty-four days, but it is expected this time will be materially lowered on the next voyage. The boat was in good condition despite the ice encountered on her outward trip.

EVACUATION OF PEKIN.

Aug. 14 Agreed Upon as the Date When Allies Will Leave.

Pekin, July 19.—The full and final evacuation of Pekin by the allies will take place on Aug. 14, the anniversary of the relief of the legationers. On that date the control of the city will be formally transferred to the Chinese in a public function. The evacuation is a matter of congratulation to the Chinese, who believe they have been successful in wearing out the patience of the foreign commanders.

FLED FROM TAR AND FEATHERS.

Brutal Knocking Down of an Aged Father Enraged Neighbors.

Sioux City, Iowa, July 19.—Threatened with tar and feathers or hanging Harrison Martin of Sioux City has fled from home. He knocked his father, aged ninety, down when the latter failed to get pension money. A report of his brutality reached the ears of neighbors and a small mob formed to lynch the son. Desperate efforts of older men prevented this. Martin has not been caught.

Ann Arbor, Mich., July 19.—The sheriff's son and two other deputies had a tussel with three tramps. Revolvers were used. The tramps captured the deputy sheriffs' guns and scooted off. The sheriff offers $50 for each capture.

Hoppers Stop a Train.

Brandon, Man., July 19.—It is hard to believe that grasshoppers will stop a railroad train, but such was the cause of a two-hour delay of the Imperial Limited, the Canadian Pacific railway's transcontinental flyer at a point on the line about fifteen miles east of here a few days ago. The hoppers were in clouds along the track and the rails became so slippery that the trainmen had to go along the track with sand before the train could move. The hoppers were not of the grain-destructive species.

Fortune in Strawberries.

Cedar Falls, Iowa, July 19.—G. Bowman, a gardener of this city, has gathered this season from one acre of ground 4,680 quarts of strawberries, which he placed on the market at 10 cents a quart. His raspberry crop was a failure.

ATTACK ON SCHLEY

MACLAY'S HISTORY CANNOT BE USED AS A TEXT BOOK AT ANNAPOLIS.

DEMANDS JUSTICE FOR SCHLEY

Open Letter Addressed to the President Asserting That There Is a Clique in the Navy Department to Traduce Schley—Long Denies Having Seen Proofs of the Book, as Claimed by the Author.

Washington, July 21.—The secretary of the navy has decided that the third volume of MacLay's history of the Spanish-American war shall not be used as a text book at the naval academy unless the obnoxious language it contains in characterizing the action of Rear Admiral Schley shall be eliminated. The secretary says that it would be manifestly improper to have a history containing such intemperate language as a text book for the cadets. In this connection the secretary says that the proofs of the entire volume were not submitted to him by the historian. He received only the proofs of the third chapter, that relating to the mobilization of the fleets, which contained a summary of the orders which he, as secretary of the navy, had issued in making the naval preparations for the war. The chapter was satisfactory, and he returned it to Mr. MacLay with an indication of his approval. He says he never saw the account of the battle of Santiago and the criticisms of Rear Admiral Schley until after the book was published. Mr. MacLay was appointed to his present position in the New York navy yard Aug. 23, 1900, having been transferred from the lighthouse service.

This Is Different.

A Baltimore, Md., dispatch says: Gen. Felix Angus, publisher of the Baltimore American, has written the following letter to President McKinley, which was wired:

"William McKinley, President, Canton, Ohio: 'MacLay's History of the Navy' is the standard in use at the naval academy. In the third volume, just issued, the historian charges Rear Admiral Schley with being a coward, a liar, a caitiff, an incompetent and insubordinate.

"In an interview in the American this morning MacLay the historian, who is a navy department clerk, classed as a laborer and attached to the Brooklyn navy yard, says that proofs of this third volume, which should have told the most glorious story in all our naval annals, were submitted to Secretary Long and Admiral Sampson and approved by them in advance of publication; also that Long put him in his present position after he had read and approved this scurrilous attack upon Admiral Schley.

"These proofs were also submitted to Admiral Dewey, who refused to read them.

"If aught were needed to convince any fair-minded man that a clique in the navy department has conspired to traduce the hero of Santiago and that the conspiracy was carried into execution while that brave and gallant officer was suffering expartation on the fever-infested coasts of South Africa, this should furnish it.

"Will you, Mr. President, in view of all this, sit quietly by and permit these conspirators to continue their diabolical work? Every justice-loving American appeals to you to intervene in the name, and for the sake, of fair play. Next to being right at all times, which no man ever was, the best thing is to find out as soon as possible that you are wrong and right yourself immediately. —Felix Angus,

"Publisher Baltimore American."

IN AN OPEN BOAT.

A Man and His Young Son Tossed About on the Sea for Two Months.

New York, July 21. — The Argentine transport Guardia Nacional, which has arrived at Buenos Ayres, according to a dispatch from that place to the Herald, picked up, off the Falkland islands, a small boat containing a man named Newman and his nine-year-old son. The two were carried away by currents from Stanley, and for sixty-two days were tossed about in their light craft on the open sea. A small supply of potatoes and turnips on board when they left Stanley saved the father and son from starvation.

He may write and receive letters and visits from friends "within a reasonable extent." In fact, his correspondence will be practically unlimited.

SHIP DESTROYED

CATCHES ON FIRE JUST OUTSIDE SANDY HOOK AND SINKS.

THE CREW WAS SAFELY TAKEN OFF

Vessel Was Laden With Oil and Bound for Hongkong—Fire Tugs Poured Tons of Water Into the Vessel but Were Unable to Control the Fire — Finally Sinks in Eleven Fathoms of Water.

New York, July 20.—The full-rigged ship Commodore L. H. Allen, outward-bound with 80,000 cases of oil for Hongkong, was discovered to be aground and on fire just outside of Sandy Hook yesterday afternoon. Word was telegraphed to this city and a number of tugs and fire boats went to her assistance. She was later pulled off, towed inside the Hook and anchored near the shore. The tugs poured tons of water into her but the fire kept eating its way through the hold.

The crew of the Allen was taken off during the evening and brought to this city. They saved their effects. They said the fire started shortly after the noon hour, how, no one knows. The ship was still being towed by a tug and the crew got hastily into it, fearing an explosion. As none came they got back on the vessel and began fighting the fire and stayed on board until it was seen they could be of no further use.

Capt. Merriman of the Allen sent them to the city. At 11:30 last night the Allen was still burning. The vessel's galley and other deck houses had been destroyed, but the spars and rigging had not caught fire. The vessel was almost submerged and the fireboat New Yorker and five other boats were still at work pouring water into her hold.

At 3 o'clock this morning Sandy Hook reported that the Allen had sunk in eleven fathoms of water.

EARL RUSSELL PLEADS GUILTY.

English Peer Sentenced to Serve Three Months in Prison.

London, July 20.—Earl Russell pleaded guilty to the charge of bigamy and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment as a first-class misdemeanant. The trial began in the royal gallery of the house of lords at 11 o'clock with all the pomp and ceremony of ancient days. The present countess, wearing a gray dress and a big hat trimmed with cream lace, occupied a front seat. After Lawyer Robson's motion to quash the indictment had been refused by the earl of Halsbury, the lord high chancellor, Russell, in a voice scarcely audible, pleaded guilty to the charge of "having committed felony by contracting a bigamous marriage with one Mollie Cook in the State of Nevada, his wife being then alive." A few minutes after 1 o'clock the 200 peers composing the jury retired, and very shortly after announced their verdict.

SAN FRANCISCO IS THEIRS.

Epworth Leaguers Are Being Well Taken Care of.

San Francisco, July 20.—The first day of the fifth International Epworth League convention opened with perfect California weather. During the forenoon the streets leading to the Mechanics' Pavilion, the headquarters of the league were thronged with people and long before the hour fixed for the preliminary proceedings the vast structure, which will accommodate 15,000 persons, was practically filled. Provision has been made for any possible overflow in churches of various denominations. Differences of creed have not been considered and the entire city is taking an active interest in securing the success of the gathering.

DEVASTATED BY FLOOD.

Steamer From Nome Brings News of a Terrible Disaster.

Seattle, Wash., July 20.—The steamer Roanoke, which arrived from Nome yesterday, brought particulars of a terrible flood on Fish river which occurred on June 15, causing a loss of over $50,000. The flood swept down Fish river, demolishing buildings, sweeping away stores and houses and carrying general devastation in its wake. The damage was almost entirely confined to Council City, where every building but one, the Dauntless hotel, was destroyed. That was saved by a heavy log cabin, and although the cabin was demolished, it turned the ice and thus saved the hotel. The people are living in tents on the hills.

OHIOANS OUT IN FORCE.

Their Day at the Pan-American Is One of the Biggest Yet.

Buffalo, July 20. — Ohio day will go down in Pan-American records as one of the biggest days at the exposition. It will be memorable in several ways; chiefly because of the many distinguished men and the multitude of representative citizens that Ohio sent here to celebrate for her. It is doubtful if the Buckeye State ever on any other occasion received the applause and praise which were showered upon her in the Temple of Music and it is certain that no finer praise has been bestowed upon the exposition management.

DAKOTA WHEAT CROP.

With the Present Conditions the Yield Will Surpass All Expectations.

Fargo, N. D., July 21.—With present conditions the wheat yield of the state will surpass the most sanguine expectations. Wild claims of thirty or more bushels per acre are being made in many localities. Owing to the fact that the wheat is just now in the milky stage and will soon be in the dough stage, there is no possibility of accurately stating the yield. A day or two of hot wind would do untold damage in shortening the yield and damaging the grade. Unless hurried along by too hot weather the wheat harvest will not begin for a week or ten days on the higher lands, and not before two weeks in the valley proper. A quantity of barley has already been cut and some oats will be harvested this week.

GOLD EXCITEMENT.

Rich Veins Claimed to Be Found in Wisconsin.

La Crosse, Wis., July 21.—A valuable vein of gold has been discovered by Matt and Louis Monti of Genoa on the farm of J. P. Allen in the town of Webster, about two miles from the Avalanche on the west branch of the Kickapoo, Vernon county, this state. For some time copper has been mined in the vicinity, but gold had not been looked for until accidentally discovered by men at work in the mines. Samples have been sent to Chicago and are said to be the second best ever received there. Chicago capitalists have made large offers for the mine, but the present owners will work it themselves, having refused all offers to sell.

BLINDNESS NO BAR.

Minnesota Man Taking the Examination Before Illinois State Board

Chicago, July 21.—Frederick Farmer, a blind man from Spring Valley, Minn., is taking an examination before the state board of health in this city for a certificate as an osteopath practitioner in Illinois. Mr. Farmer is thirty-one years old and a graduate of the American School of Osteopathy of Kirksville, Mo. The questions are dictated to him and are answered by writing on a typewriter with raised type. Great aptitude is shown by Mr. Farmer in manipulating the machine and correcting mistakes. The examining physicians also report that he has shown remarkable ability in the rapidity and correctness with which he answers the examination questions.

WITHOUT FIRE PROTECTION.

Defective Intake Pipes Leave La Crosse in a Serious Condition.

La Crosse, Wis., July 21.—The government harbor work has stirred the sand in the Mississippi to such an extent that, together with a defective intake pipe, the big Holly pumps are clogged and stopped, leaving the city without fire protection except from the little auxiliary pumps. All fire steamers are pressed into service to protect emergencies. It will take twenty-four hours to make repairs.

ASYLUM QUARANTINED.

Smallpox Breaks Out Among Insane Inmates.

Kalamazoo, Mich., July 21.—Dr. Henry H. Schaberg, city health officer, yesterday established a strict quarantine against the Michigan insane asylum, where twenty-nine cases of smallpox and varialoid were discovered. The disease was brought into the institution by a female nurse who recently visited her home.

TROUBLE ADJUSTED.

Freight Truckers Struck and the New Men Also Went Out.

Sioux City, Iowa, July 21—The freight truckers in the warehouses of the Omaha road quit work after demanding an increase of pay from $1.50 to $2. New men were hired, who worked twenty minutes. The warehouse work came to a standstill, but the trouble has been adjusted without any increase in wages.

HARVEST HANDS WANTED.

Rich Yields Reported From Morris and Vicinity.

Morris, Minn., July 21. — Barley and oats are being harvested and the crops are fine ones. Haying is about finished and the stacks are many. Some early flax is also being cut. The wheat harvest will begin in earnest next week. There are not enough men in sight to attend to it.

HARVEST AT NIGHT.

Farmers Plan to Avoid the Extreme Heat of the Day.

New Richmond, Wis., July 21.—If the present intense heat prevails harvesting will be done here between sundown and sunrise. Four horses dropped dead in the harvest field in this vicinity yesterday. Farmers are planning to suspend work entirely during the daytime.

DULUTH'S TORRID WAVE.

Temperature Goes Up Thirty Degrees in Three Hours.

Duluth, Minn., July 21. — The hot wave has the head of the lakes in its grasp and yesterday between 10 a. m. and 1 p. m. the temperature shot up 30 degrees. It registered 61 at 10 and 92 at 1. The maximum for the day was 96.

Consumed by Flames.

Crookston, Minn., July 21. — A barn containing three horses, a large amount of feed, harness and machinery, and belonging to Ben Champagne, a farmer living near Russia, was entirely destroyed by fire. Its origin is unknown.

Kasson Woman's Suicide.

Kasson, Minn., July 21.—Mrs. Warren Pond, living three miles east of this village, in a fit of temporary aberration of mind, committed suicide by hanging herself in a barn during the absence of her family.

Dies of Heart Disease.

Cumberland, Wis., July 21.—William Woods of Muncie, Ind., dropped dead of heart disease at the home of his brother near here. Deceased was the fourth brother to succumb to that disease.

OLD HOME WEEK IN VERMONT

There are five times as many people in the city of Chicago as there are in the whole state of Vermont, says the Chicago Tribune. Perhaps two-thirds as many people born in Vermont live outside that state as still reside within its borders. Vermont has been described as a state composed chiefly of hills, mountains, rocks, lakes, and stone quarries. Of its farming land 200,000 acres have been abandoned by those who formerly tilled it and can be bought for $4 or $5 an acre. Since the war the population of the state has practically stood still. Its sturdy sons are attracted by the greater opportunities to get rich offered by the fertile West and the large cities of the country. They are widely scattered all over the Union. But wherever they go the sons and daughters of Vermont carry with them deep and abiding love for the Green Mountain States. All over the country may be found associations of the Sons and Daughters of Vermont. In the other New England states alone there are eight great societies of the kind, with an aggregate of 100,000 natives of Vermont who are eligible for membership.

So strong is the affection of the Vermont man for his old home that preparations are now under way for a great and unique celebration in honor of it. In this celebration practically the whole state of Vermont will take part, and the state legislature, by special enactment, has set apart the week of Aug. 11-16 to be given up to it. Invitations bearing the great seal of the state and the signature of the governor have been sent out to tens of thousands of natives bidding them come back to the Green Mountains and join with the stay-at-home population in fitting celebration of "Old Home Week." So general has been the response to these invitations that the plans now under way provide for the entertainment of more than 100,000 returning prodigals. Nothing could furnish stronger proof of the fact that sentiment is still one of the ruling forces of the world.

From Boston will run at least two special trains loaded with sons and daughters of Vermont, and from almost every state word has come that parties are being formed for "Old Home Week." In the meantime the present citizens of that state are making most elaborate plans for the reception of their returning kinsfolk. In more than 100 Vermont towns and cities special and separate celebrations will be held, and every hillside in the state will echo with the strains of "Home, Sweet Home." No matter in what hamlet or on what hillside farm a native Vermonter was born, he will be likely to find his old friends and neighbors gathered together there in reunion during the week of the Old Home celebration.

At Burlington, Rutland, and other large towns of the state, which in comparison with the great cities of the country are mere villages, local associations have been formed which will receive and entertain as their guests the Vermont associations which are coming from distant states. Figuratively speaking, a beacon fire of welcome will be lighted on every mountain top.

To the average man the enthusiasm of the native Vermonter for the stony state which gave him birth is hard to understand. But if he asks a Vermont man to give the reasons for the faith which is in him he is likely to be astonished.

"Did you ever hear of the Green Mountain boys?" he will answer. "Do you remember how Ethan Allen and eighty-three Vermont farmers surprised the great British stronghold of Fort Ticonderoga and forced its surrender 'in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress'? Does Crown Point mean anything to you? Have you forgotten Bennington, where General Stark whipped the Hessians, killing 964 out of 1,500 men, and capturing all their cannon? If you'll go down home with me in August and climb up to the top of the Bennington Battle Monument you'll wonder, as I do, how a Vermont man can live in one of these flat prairie states."

These Green Mountain boys, who cut such a dashing figure in the revolution, had some practice in fighting before that war began. They were busy for several years before Lexington in driving out the immigrants from New York, who attempted to seize their lands under a royal grant. In 1877, in fact, the people of Vermont got together and declared themselves a free and independent state, without waiting to be taken into the union or asking the consent of anybody. In this exhibition of spunk the sons of Vermont still glory.

Bennington Monument.

In the record of the state during the rebellion Vermont people find another cause for just pride. When Sumter was fired on Vermont had 37,000 enrolled militia. Out of this number 35,000 promptly went into the Union army. More than 5,000 were killed and as many more ruined by wounds and disease. No other state suffered so great a loss in proportion. During the whole war not a single Vermont regiment gave up its colors in battle, and what the Vermont man did at Bull Run, Cedar Creek, the Wilderness, and Gettysburg is a part of history. Vermont people are jealous of the reputation of their state in producing fighting men.

If you feel inclined to pity men born in a state which is sterile and inhospitable you will do well not to waste your sympathy on a Vermonter. He will tell you that Vermont produced 40,000,000 pounds a year of the best butter in the world; that one-third of all the maple sugar in America comes from Vermont groves; that the yearly hay crop of the state is valued at $12,000,000, and that three-quarters of all the marble quarried in the United States comes from its hillsides. He will ask whether the horsemen of the country owe anything to the Morgan, Messenger, and Black Hawk strains, and what we should do for fine wool without Vermont sheep as a foundation for our flocks.

Vermont as the first state to be admitted to membership with the original thirteen, its admission dating from 1791. Until a few years ago nine-tenths of its population was of American birth. Recently a large number of Canadian French have come into the state to work in the great factories which are being built up about the water powers for which the state is famous.

These people are said, as a race, to be the most prolific in the world and there is an expectation that the state will, therefore increase somewhat more rapidly than it has in the past. Another effort is under way to fill up the depopulated farms with emigrants from Sweden, but the fact that more fertile land can be secured farther west has prevented any great results in this direction.

Almost equally with its history, the Vermont man is boastful of the natural scenery of his state. He alludes to the fact that there are eighteen mountain peaks more than 3,500 feet in height within the state limits and talks with a pang of remembered pleasure of the glories of Lake Champlain, which stretches for 118 miles in length and is fourteen miles wide. Of all the New England states Vermont is the only one entirely cut off from the sea, while at the same time its chief city, Burlington, on Lake Champlain, has a maritime commerce employing a fleet of 1,000 vessels and amounting in the aggregate to $12,000,000 annually.

Testing Warnings at Sea.

Twenty-five years have elapsed since Prof. Tyndall, at the instance of the Trinity House corporation, carried out a series of experiments at the South Foreland, near Dover, England, to determine the value of various sounds as warnings to the mariner of his approach to dangerous spots in thick weather. The result was a large increase in the number of fog signals all round the British coast. Much knowledge has been acquired and many new inventions have been made in the intervening period, and a special committee of the elder brethren of the Trinity House, assisted by Lord Rayleigh and other eminent scientists and engineers have been engaged for some time in making elaborate tests of all the latest improvements in the different kinds of apparatus for making cautionary noises. The scene of their operations is the Isle of Wight. One of their chief objects is to determine the relative merits of reeds and sirens as sound producers. Much attention, also, has been given to the trumpet and various modifications of that instrument. Other careful experiments are to determine the carrying capacity, in certain conditions of notes of different pitch, and the effect on the dissemination of sound of the conformation of the coast line, etc. Another point to be considered is the question of the most effective and the most economical utilization of power.—New York Post.

The Laughing Plant of Arabia.

The laughing plant is a native of Central and Eastern Arabia. It gets its name, not because the plant laughs, but because it is the cause of creating laughter in any one eating its seeds. The plant is of moderate size, with bright yellow flowers in clusters, and soft, velvety seed pods, each of which contains two or three seeds resembling small black beans, which, if eaten, produce effects analagous to those of laughing gas. The flavor of the seeds is somewhat like that of opium; they taste sweet, while their odor produces a sickening sensation. The seeds are pulverized and taken in small doses. Any one taking them begins to laugh loudly and boisterously, and then sings, dances, and cuts all kinds of fantastic capers. The effects continue for about an hour, and, when the excitement ceases, the exhausted individual falls into a deep sleep, on awakening from which he is utterly unconscious of any such demonstrations having been made by him when under the influence of the seeds of the laughing plant.

Protestants Show Priest Good Will.

A number of Protestant citizens of Toledo, O., believing that Rev. Edward Hannin, a Catholic priest of that city, had overworked himself in the interests of his parish in the erection of a new church, quietly collected $1,000 and tendered it to defray his expenses on a health trip abroad. Father Hannin declined the offer on the ground that he cannot this year sever himself from the parish interests.

To Preserve Trailing Arbutus.

In an almost despairing effort to stay the dreaded extinction of the fragrant trailing arbutus flower, the Legislature of Connecticut passed a law in 1899 forbidding any person to pull up the plants by the roots on land owned by another under a penalty of $20.

USE MOUSE WHISKERS.

Bears' Eyebrows Among New Things Used by Fishermen.

The business done in mouse whiskers is considerable this year, for they are used in the making of the wonderful new fly for fishermen—the "new gray gnat." And they are expensive—nearly 2 cents per whisker. Trout rise very much better at mouse whisker flies than at the same "gnat" dressed in jungle-cock hackles, which look very much like them. The trade of artificial fly making is the lightest-fingered business in the world, and it is not one man or woman out of five thousand who can learn to tie flies. These tyers are remarkable for the beauty and delicacy of their hands, and only the cleverest of fingers can deal with the "niggling" work of knotting hairs that can hardly be seen. In making a fly the earth has to be ransacked for precisely the correct feathers and hairs, and one hair wrong will make all the difference. It takes an expert tyer only 15 minutes to turn out a fly, which consists of a tiny hook, with wings of Egyptian dove feather, legs of fox hair, and a body of mouse fur, wound round with a thread of yellow silk. A carelessly made fly will have neither legs nor "feelers," but the true expert adds the legs, and puts on a pair of long "feelers" of cat hair, white at the tips. All these tiny details will be exactly in their places, and so finely tied to the hook that the fly will take half a dozen strong fish and be none the worse. Bears' eyebrows, being stiff, and exactly the right shade, are used in a newly invented fly that is killing quantities of salmon this year; and these eyebrows come from the Himalayan brown bear, and cost about $1.50 per set.

MUST DO THEIR WORK WELL

Incompetent Dentists Liable to Damages for Their Bungling.

The courts are taking cognizance of the competency or incompetency of professional men. A short time ago a New York tribunal held that a physician was liable for unskillful or negligent treatment of a patient and now the court of appeals of that state has rendered a decision holding a corporation liable for unskillful dental work. This corporation, according to the complaint, represented that it carried on the practice of dentistry in connection with its other departments. The plaintiff, a woman, having undergone treatment, sued for alleged resultant injury and received a verdict. Apparently the defence of the corporation was that the dental business was not, in fact, carried on by it, but was owned by the dentist. But the court held that the company having held itself out as carrying on a dental department and the plaintiff having been ignorant of the fact that the company was not the real owner of the dental department, the corporation was estopped from making such a denial. For, under the circumstances, the court said that the plaintiff had a right to rely not only on the presumption that the company would employ a skillful dentist as its servant, but also on the fact that if that servant, the dentist, whether skillful or not, was guilty of any malpractice, she had a responsible party to answer therefor in damages.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Cowboy Was Generous.

Millionaire McKittrick, who, as all California knows, is the king of the oil district, and is reputed to own half of southern California, was leaving his ranch to drive into town the other day, when he was accosted by one of his cowpunchers, who had been on the job about a fortnight. "Say, boss," said the cowboy, "can I draw $10?" Mr. McKittrick was about to refer the man to the foreman, but, being good-natured, he handed over the gold eagle. "Oh, I don't want the money," said the cowboy; "I want you to get me some truck in town. I want a dollar-'an-a-half pair o' yaller shoes, three pairs o' two-bit socks, a sack o' Durham, some cigarette papers, a pair o' overalls, two suits o' underclothes, two Stanley shirts, the four-bit kind, an' a two-bit silk handkerchief." Charmed by the gall of his employe, the millionaire took the commission. He returned late at night loaded down like Santa Claus, sought out the cowpuncher, delivered the goods, saying: "It cost only eight-fifty. Heres the dollar and a half left over."

"Oh, that's all right," said the generous cowboy, "keep the change!"—San Francisco News Letter.

A Lucky Accident.

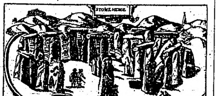
Jerry Cooper considers himself one of the luckiest men in England, and not without reason. He used to be a gymnastic instructor in the navy. Then he went into the merchant marine, and five years ago while on a trading vessel off Newfoundland the donkey engine on board blew up, killing four men and knocking Jerry speechless and deaf. Yet a man even in this condition must live, and to gain a means of livelihood when he returned to England he gave exhibitions of conjuring and contortions. A week or two ago he had a bad fall, which made him unconscious, and upon regaining himself he found that speech and hearing had come back to him. And in all Britain there's no one happier than Jerry Cooper.

Lumber Capacity of California.

Timber experts tell us that California alone has a capacity of lumber in her standing forests of over 100,000,000,000 cubic feet.

A drowning man will catch at a straw—and so will a man who is thirsty.

GIGANTIC STONES FALLING.



The great rocks at Stonehenge, England, which have puzzled archaeologists for centuries, are falling and most of them are now on their sides.

The circle of stones, 100 feet in diameter, in a ditch have been attributed to the Phoenicians, Belgae, Danes, Druids and Saxons.

Room Still for the Germans.

A German consul in a western city has warned Germany that immigration from all parts of the fatherland to the United States should cease, because, he says, the crafts and trades in these states are overcrowded, and that no German inclined to seek new fortunes can hope to grow rich in America. That consul is evidently a pessimist of an exceptionally dolorous sort. There is still plenty of room in this wide land for additions to the host of sturdy Germans who have prospered so well with us and who are so devoted and loyal to the spirit of liberty and true democracy which gives the keynote to our most cherished institutions. Thousands of Germania's sons and daughters have crossed the Atlantic and have accomplished much for the advancement of what is soundest, strongest and best in the civilization and the advancement of conditions in this continent. Intelligent Americans desire that the volume of German immigration may be increased largely. And there is no lack of space for our German accessions. That western consul was suffering from indigestion or billiousness when he sent word to Berlin that Germans should stay at home because his purblind vision could see no open door for newcomers here. We want more Germans. They can help us and we can help them.—New York Tribune.

Rev. John Bancroft Devins of the editorial staff of the New York Observer has been given the degree of Doctor of Divinity of Center college, Danville, Ky.

WOMAN AND HOME.

STYLISH LINEN SUIT.

Summer gowns are now at their best, since they are to be seen on women, and surely the stylish dress parades bear out well the early promise of the show windows and rooms. The elaborateness of sleeves and skirts, together with the license for complexity that usually prevails in summery fabrics, aids much in effecting a most attractive variety.

A new feature of linen dresses is the very stylish use of sage green and greenish gray, both shades that make up handsomely when trimmed with lace or stitched bands of the goods. These dresses usually are made with a Spanish flounce banded with a stitched fold of the goods. The waist, on the shirt-waist order, has a front plastron of white mull or tucked lawn outlined with lace or embroidery run with black velvet. Suits of the mercerized linen in these new green shades are made for dress-up wear in skirt and bolero trimmed lace, a fancy white shirtwaist coming beneath the jacket. One of these suits appears in the accompanying initial picture. Ivory white lace trimmed it and the white silk revers of its bolero were embroidered in black silk. Gowns of this material commonly are made so elaborately that this example is to be counted as a simple one.

FRENCH GIRL LIFE.

"The program of what a French girl may or may not do is drawn up very precisely," declares Th. Bentzon (Mme. Blanc), in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Unless she is poor and has to earn her own living she never goes out alone. The company of a friend of her own age would not be sufficient to chaperon her. It is an established rule that novel-reading is a rare exception. She is entirely subject to her parents' will in the matter of reading. And if she asks to see anything at the theater except a classical masterpiece or an opera, they will tell her that such a thing is not considered proper, feeling sure of her silent submission.

After she is fifteen years old she is generally allowed to be in the drawing room on her mother's reception days, but must keep to the modest and secondary place assigned her; pouring the tea, and presenting it, courtesying to her elders, answering when spoken to—in short, undergoing her apprenticeship. She has but few jewels, and under no pretext any diamonds. Custom does not permit her to wear costly things; nor does it give her the right, in general, to have a money allowance worth speaking of for her personal use. She receives a trifling sum for charity, her books and gloves. A young girl never takes the lead in conversation, but always allows the married lady the precedence, and she finds it quite natural to occupy the background."

PINK MUSLIN WITH WHITE SPOTS.

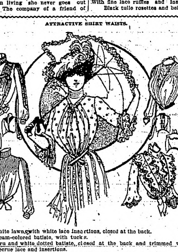
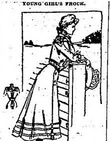
ATTRACTIVE SHIRT WAISTS.



1. White lawn with white lace insertions, closed at the back.
2. Cream-colored batiste, with tucks.
3. Ecru and white dotted batiste, closed at the back and trimmed with ecrue lace and insertions.
4. White, with Valenciennes lace and all-over embroidery.
5. Yellow and white-figured batiste, with yellow Valenciennes lace.

YOUNG GIRL'S FROCK.



Of white serge, made with bolero, which is edged with three fine tucks and caught back with stitched strap of serge, with large pearl button; heavy white lace collar.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

For a graceful carriage be careful to stand with the weight on the balls of the feet, the chest thrown out and the hips kept well back.

Children under five should be ignorant of the flavors of anything but simple cereals, with milk and a few vegetables. Ice water should never be given to a child until the extreme chill has disappeared, and candy is objectionable at all times and in all places.

The ideal toothbrush is not hard enough to cause the gums to bleed, and its bristles are firmly fixed. In cheap toothbrushes the bristles usually seem made to come out, and they do, getting fixed between the teeth in a most uncomfortable and annoying way.

It depends altogether upon a woman's figure as to the syle of corset she should wear. If she is very, very slight, the girdle corset would suit her, otherwise the straight front corset, which supports the abdomen and leaves the body free and entirely unrestrained above the waist line, is the best.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Pickled String Beans.

String the beans and cut them into inch lengths. Let them stand in strong brine eight days, changing it three times. Drain and lay in clear, cold water for a day, then dry between the folds of a towl. Pack in glass jars and fill the jars with scalding vinegar, which has been brought to the boil with a minced onion, a dozen whole cloves, a heaping tablespoonful of mustard seed and four blades of mace. Screw on the tops and do not use for a month or six weeks.

Cherry Bounce.

Beat to a pulp two pounds each of sweet and tart cherries and mix together. The beating should be done with a heavy mallet that the stones may be crushed. Stir into the mashed fruit a pound and a quarter of granulated sugar; turn all into a stone crock and stir in two quarts of white whisky. Stand for an hour, then stir and pour into a demijohn. Cork and stand for a month, shaking hard each day, then let stand for six weeks without shaking.—Rack off, strain and bottle.

Magistrate—Now, my boy, you are on your oath. Do you know what that means? Witness—Er—no, sir; not exactly. Magistrate—Do you know what you're expected to tell? Witness (promptly)—Oh, yes, sir; the lawyer that brought me here wrote it all down so's I could learn it off by heart.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

The Grain Louse vs. Wheat.

It is appropriate at this time to notice this insect, whose ravages in wheat in several counties of Oklahoma have greatly reduced the value of this year's crop, says a bulletin of the Oklahoma Station. By extensive correspondence and by conversations with many wheat growers, uniform testimony is secured that throughout certain regions the wheat or grain-louse has greatly damaged this year's crop. In fact the injury in some regions has been so great that farmers have preferred to replant the wheat ground to some other crop. A recommendation to this effect was inserted in some of the newspapers of the territory some time ago.

The station received the first specimens of this louse early in April, and the entomologist has since that time given most of his time to a thorough investigation of the distribution and life history of the insect. It became at once apparent that the main damage was not due to the well-known "grain-louse" (Siphonophora avenae), whose structure and life history have been so well aired in the newspapers of late. Our form differs from the one mentioned in several details and will soon be described as a new variety closely related to the true "grain-louse." In some cases it was noted that the general trend of the migrations of the insect was from south to north. The louse, like its better known relative, is capable of very rapid multiplication and this is favored by dry weather. Males are unknown and the reproduction is by the process called parthenogenesis, or the giving birth to the living young. The viviparous females are wingless but enough winged females are produced to enable the species to migrate from one field to another in search of food. These winged females were present in large numbers from about the middle of April to the first of May.

There is no evidence that this louse has a true egg-stage. It is probable that it winters over in the adult stage and feeds upon the leaves of the wheat during favorable weather during the entire winter. The past winter was in some respects very favorable to the development of the louse in large numbers and it is not therefore a matter for surprise that such hordes of lice should have appeared so early in the spring. There is no practical spraying method that can be recommended against this insect pest. Some have suggested spraying with the usual kerosene emulsion and this would probably reduce their number if applied before they spread over so large an area as to make the plan quite impossible and too costly. Our greatest hope lies, however, in the rapid multiplication and energy of the natural insect enemies of this louse. The most abundant and useful of these enemies in Oklahoma is surely one of the "lady-bird" beetles (Hippodamia convergens). This is a nearly hemispherical beetle about three-sixteenths of an inch in length and of a reddish-yellow color with several black spots on the back. The head and thorax are black with reddish-yellow margins and the thorax has two elongated reddish-yellow spots.

The larvae of these beetles are even more rapacious and active than the mature beetles. The larva is a long, blackish, somewhat flattened, and very active larva with six legs of more than usual length. The larva when it reaches maturity curls up on some leaf or stem and changes to the pupa from which the mature beetle emerges in a few days. The beetles live over winter in the mature stage in crevices of trees and boards. These "lady-bird" beetles have appeared in such large numbers in some parts of Oklahoma that farmers have written to the Experiment Station for some remedy to destroy them. Every wheat grower should look on these beetles as his best friend and in no case allow them to be destroyed.

Specimens of the wheat louse and especially specimens of all the beetles found in the wheat fields are very much desired by the Experiment Station at Stillwater and may be sent through the mail if inclosed in tin or wooden boxes.

How to Dress Calves.

Calves from three to six weeks old, and weighing about one hundred pounds, or, say, from eighty to one hundred and twenty pounds, are the most desirable weights for shipment. The head should be cut out, so as to leave the hide of the head on the skin. The legs should be cut off at the knee joint. The entrails should all be removed, excepting the kidneys, the liver, lights and heart should be taken out. Cut the carcass open from the neck through the entire length—from head to bumgut. If this is done they are not so apt to sour and spoil during hot weather. Many a fine carcass has spoiled in hot weather because of it not being cut open. Don't wash the carcass out with water, but wipe out with a dry cloth. Don't ship until the animal heat is entirely out of the body, and never tie the carcass up in a bag, as this keeps the air from circulating and makes the meat more liable to become tainted.

Mark for shipment by fastening a shipping tag to the hind leg. Calves under fifty pounds should not be shipped, and are liable to be condemned by the health officers as being unfit for food. Merchants, too, are liable to be fined if found selling these flunks, for violation of the law. Very heavy calves such as have been fed on buttermilk, never sell well in our market—they are neither veal nor beef.—Howard, Bartels & Co.

Horticultural Observations.

The fearful ravages of the San Jose scale are plainly evident in some of our best peach-growing states. We believe that some of our Illinois men that are laughing at this pest as of no consequence would quickly change their minds if they could go through the peach-growing sections of our Atlantic states. Whole orchards have, within two years, had to be cut down, each orchard consisting of thousands of trees. A representative of the Farmers' Review recently visited an orchard of thousands of trees that are apparently doomed to the axe. The trees are just coming into bearing, but are so covered with the scale that treatment is almost out of the question.

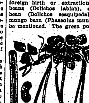
The question of destroying plant lice by fumigation is a live one and one that is being exploited. Of old we used to kill rose lice with the fumes of tobacco. The present mode includes the killing of tree and plant insects by more powerful gases. Thus the San Jose scale is being disposed of by the assistance of hydrocyanic gas applied to the trees when the latter have been covered with big tents. With small peach trees the application becomes easy, especially when the trees are low-headed. Later experimenters are using the same gas to destroy lice on vegetables. Small caps are made, to be placed over each plant, and inside is dropped a small amount of the chemicals that make the gas. In ten minutes the insects are all dead, and the plant uninjured. The process is, however, only in its experimental stage.

Asparagus Bean.

There are several kinds of beans that, though articles of diet in Oriental countries, are used only to a limited extent in the United States, usually by Chinese or other residents of foreign birth or extraction. Lablab beans (Dolichos lablab), asparagus bean (Dolichos sesquipedalis), and mungo bean (Phaseolus mungo), may be mentioned. The green pods of asparagus bean (here illustrated) are largely used as a snap bean. The pods are long, containing 10 to 16 seeds, more slender than string beans, and slightly ridged along the middle of the two valves. Under the name of "toukok" this vegetable is cultivated by the Chinese in some regions of California, and is said to be finding favor with the white residents, and is considered a valuable variety of snap bean.



Asparagus bean.

Spoiled by Overweight.

Farm-Poultry, an influential Boston publication, has of late been inviting opinions concerning the proper weight of the American breeds of chickens, among which are the Plymouth Rocks and the Wyandottes. We should say that fully two-thirds of the breeders who have expressed themselves on the subject take the position that the standard weight is too high. It is claimed that the medium-sized birds of these families are almost invariably better layers than those which meet the demands of the standard in regard to weight. One well-known poultry judge, in his contribution to the discussion, says that not more than one Plymouth Rock in twelve which pass through his hands at the shows is up to standard weight. If the men who patronize the shows meet with difficulty in getting their birds up to standard weight how much more of a task it must be for farmers who, as a rule, can give but a fraction of their time to the study of the problems of the poultry yard. And if this heavy weight is obtained at the sacrifice of the laying qualities why not cut it down? Some advertisers take great pains to have it known that their birds are fully up to standard weight. Farmers should know that they can easily pay more money for that kind of Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes than they are worth.

Toast to the Horse.

Dr. Kane, president of the New York Drivers' association, at a public dinner recently, delivered the following toast to the horse:

"That bundle of sentient nerves, with a heart of a woman, the eye of a gazelle, the courage of a gladiator, the docility of a slave, the proud courage of a king and the blind obedience of a good soldier. The companion of the desert and plain; that turns the moist furrow in the spring in order that all the world may have abundant harvests; that furnishes the sport of kings; that, with blazing eye and distended nostril, fearlessly leads our greatest generals through carnage and the smoke of battle to glory and renown; whose blood forms one of the ingredients that go to make the ink in which all history is written, and who, finally mutely and sadly in black trappings pulls the humblest of us all to the newly sodded threshold of Eternity."

Clover Facts.

Bradford Miller, in the quarterly report of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, says: The growth of clover after cutting affords an excellent mulch, which accounts for itself in the succeeding crop. The seasons of growth vary, owing to favorable or unfavorable conditions, so that no time can be fixed when the cutting should be done. The general practice is to cut it too late to get the best results in hay. I have obtained the best hay by cutting when about one-third of the heads were turned brown. The mowing should be done after the dew is off, and the clover soon turned with a good tedder, which assists the curing very much. With favorable weather, it is ready for raking into windrows shortly after noon. The old rule, that clover is not ready to be put in the barn until it would rattle like a lady's silk dress, has given way to the practice of getting it under shelter before the evening dew falls upon it; if fairly well wilted, the rest of the curing is done in the mow, to the benefit of the new hay.

Where the roof of the barn has good ventilators, no special risk is taken on account of heating and causing fire. When put into the mow in this condition it cures nicely and comes out in a bright and sweet condition the following winter. The second crop for seed or for feed; if for feed, the cutting should be done before the seed is ripe. The second crop is usually of a finer growth and makes a most excellent feed for young stock. If this crop is cut for seed the cutting should be done before too ripe.

While the seed does not shatter badly if very ripe, when dried the stems of the clover break easily and the head is lost. The same trouble is encountered if the crop is cut with a mowing machine and subsequently raked and bunched for handling. A preferable way is to cut with a machine having a side delivery, which lays the clover off in bunches, where it cures without handling, and when ready is hauled away to be stacked or thrashed. If cut before too ripe, and properly cared for, the straw, after thrashing, makes a good feed for cattle. While the seed may not yield as much as when cut later, the straw compensates for the difference.

The cost of thrashing (one dollar per bushel for the machine) is too much, with the price of seed at from three to four dollars per bushel, but probably cannot be helped until the quantity raised is largely increased, but the desirability of having good, fresh seed adds to the inducement of raising your own. Clover hay should be kept under shelter, and as a feed, when properly made and cared for, for most kinds of stock, I place it second to none other.

It is claimed very generally by clover growers that a field upon which a good crop of clover is grown for two successive years will, when replowed and planted to corn, yield from fifteen to twenty-five bushels more corn per acre than it did before sown to clover, or than similar land by its side will which has not been thus treated. The percentage of increase is quite as large in raising wheat, oats, potatoes and other crops. To explain just how this is done is not the purpose of this paper, but to speak of the fact, which has been fully established both in this state and elsewhere. The plant draws nitrogen from the air, and stores it in the soil for the use of succeeding crops. The roots of the clover penetrate to a great depth in the unplowed subsoil, drawing nutriment therefrom, assisting in holding moisture, which, when the roots die and decay, increase the fertility of the soil as well as the storing capacity for moisture, and with its sister, alfalfa, has justly earned the name of the "silent subsoiler," whose success and efficiency are generally admitted and admired.

Manuring the Soil.

A bulletin treating of methods of manuring the soil has just been issued by the Experiment Station at Stillwater, Okla. The following is a summary of the bulletin: Without going into detail as to the various considerations that may affect the results of manuring, at the present stage of our agricultural practice, the chief points to be observed are:

1. To manure the soil. Use all the manure produced, prevent losses by washing away, quit burning straw, haul the manure onto the fields somewhere, sometime, somehow.

2. Manure the highest and poorest spots, give a good application at one time—from fifteen to twenty-two-horse loads—and manure another place next time.

3. Manure with reference to the time of rainfall, to the next crop which is to be grown, and to the other work which must be done. Late fall and winter, when other work is not pressing, is a good time. Light top-dressings may be applied to wheat in the fall.

4. Growing crops for green manuring alone is not the most profitable method. Pasture them and plow under the remainder when about mature. This applies chiefly to cowpeas. If sorgum is to be plowed under, it should be while the stalks are green and juicy so that they will decay quickly.

The articles that are appearing in the Farmers' Review on the Kieffer pear illustrate how skilled men may differ. Some of the horticulturists that are looked upon as authorities and as well-nigh infallible, have taken positions diametrically opposed to each other. We hope there will be more unanimity of opinion after all the evidence is in. Nearly every subject has in it more than appears on superficial investigation.

Better be stupidly silent than volubly insincere.

A corner in St. Louis that sold for $350,000 in 1891 has just changed hands for $1,000,000.

Discovered by Accident.

The passengers scarcely gave them a passing glance as they entered the car. He took a seat by the window, just like a long-time married man, while she sat on the aisle. It was part of a shrewd plan. After two stations had been passed, he began to read a newspaper, and let her ask questions twice before he answered. This was a strain, but they were trying to establish a record.

Suddenly he jerked forth his handkerchief to mop his brow, and with it came many grains of rice. Some fell in the aisle, and some fell on the passengers about them. In an instant the couple became the target of half a hundred searching eyes. She blushed prettily; he looked like a sheep.

The careless flirt of the handkerchief did the business, and, as further simulation became useless, they held each other's hands during the remainder of the journey.—Ohio State Journal.

Eccentric.

The Witness—I consider the defendant eccentric. I watched him on one occasion, and noticed that he carefully read the same newspaper all through twice.

The Court—Did you call his attention to it?

The Witness—Yes. He said he was color-blind.

The Court—What did he mean by that?

The Witness—He said he couldn't tell a newspaper that was read from one that wasn't.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Baloon Ascensionist Killed.

A balloon ascensionist was recently killed while making one of his daring trips. Life is too valuable to trifle with in foolhardy adventures. It is better to employ ourselves in peaceful pursuits, where we may be secure. Then if we take care of our health, we can live to a good old age. The best means of promoting health is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This medicine cures dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, flatulency and insomnia. Be sure to try it.

"Why not?"

"'Cause some of these fellers act, to me, like that was what they was tryin' to get away from."—Washington Star.

New French Bullet.

For some time past secret experiments have been conducted at the Chalons Musketry school in Paris with a new bullet—whether for the newly-invented rifle by the Italian, Lamacchia, or for adaptation to the Lebel, is not known. What is certain is that one of the bullets has been stolen, and that a man belonging to the electrical section of the engineers has been arrested. The bullet is described as being of copper.—Exchange.

It Was All the Same.

The moment he stepped into the hotel office it could be seen that he had been "out with the boys." His step was uncertain and his hand unsteady. He stepped to the stenographer's desk and started to dictate to the young lady who presided over the machine. His dictation ran:

"My (hic) dear wife (hic): I will not be home to-night (hic) as I am going to Kaukaukana (hic)."

"How do you spell Kaukauna?" asked the stenographer.

"Don't you know how to spell Kaukauna?"

"Dont you know how to spell (hic) Kaukauna?"

"No, I do not, answered the young lady.

"Then (hic) make it Green Bay."—Marietta North Star.

Johnson at Work Again.

Racine, Wis., July 22nd.—John Johnson of No. 924 Hamilton street, this city, is a happy man.

For years he has suffered with Kidney and Urinary trouble. He was so broken down that he was forced to quit work. Everything he tried failed, till a friend of his recommended a new remedy—Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Johnson used them, and the result surprised him. He was as well as ever he was, completely cured, and working away every day.

His case is regarded by those who know how very bad he was, as almost a miracle, and Dodd's Kidney Pills are a much talked of medicine.

Why Augustus Didn't.

Pretty Angelina Swizzleblossoms had fallen from her wheel and sprained her wrist, and Augustus Bloomengarten, her manly escort, was kneeling by her side, endeavoring to bind a handkerchief around the disabled member.

"Rubber neck, rubber neck," yelled a near-by newsboy at a passing wheelman, who turned to look back at the pathetic scene.

"But her neck isn't hurt, don't you know," replied the astonished Augustus. And the newsboy went and pounded his head against a lamp-post.—Los Angeles Herald.

It Had Been Put Up.

Hardup—Yes, I got caught in that sudden shower, and my umbrella was soaked.

Ascum—Well, it's better to have your umbrella soaked than to get soaked yourself.

Hardup—It was because my umbrella was soaked that I got soaked myself. Having put it up, I had none to put up.—Philadelphia Press.

A JUDGE'S WIFE CURED OF PELVIC CATARRH.

She Suffered for Years and Felt Her Case Was Hopeless—Cured by Pe-ru-na.

MRS. JUDGE McALLISTER.

Mrs. Judge McAllister writes from 1217 West 33rd st., Minneapolis, Minn., as follows:

"I suffered for years with a pain in the small of my back and right side. It interfered often with my domestic and social duties and I never supposed that I would be cured, as the doctor's medicine did not seem to help me any.

"Fortunately a member of our Order advised me to try Peruna and gave it such high praise that I decided to try it. Although I started in with little faith, I felt so much better in a week that I felt encouraged.

"I took it faithfully for seven weeks and am happy indeed to be able to say that I am entirely cured. Words fail to express my gratitude. Perfect health once more is the best thing I could wish for, and thanks to Peruna enjoy that now."—Minnie E. McAllister.

The great popularity of Peruna as a catarrh remedy has tempted many people to imitate Peruna. A great many so-called catarrh remedies and catarrhal tonics are to be found in many drug stores. These remedies can be procured by the druggist much cheaper than Peruna. Peruna can only be obtained at a uniform price, and no druggist can get it a cent cheaper.

Thus it is that druggists are tempted to substitute the cheap imitations of Peruna for Peruna. It is done every day without a doubt.

We would therefore caution all people against accepting these substitutes. Insist upon having Peruna. There is no other internal remedy for catarrh that will take the place of Peruna. Allow no one to persuade you to the contrary.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

ST. MARY'S ACADEMY.

Notre Dame, Indiana.

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of St. Mary's Academy, which appears in another column of this paper. We do not need to expatiate upon the scholastic advantages of St. Mary's, for the catalogue of the school shows the scope of work included in its curriculum, which is of the same high standard as that of Vassar and Bryn Mawr, and is carried out faithfully in the class rooms. We simply emphasize the spirit of earnest devotion which makes every teacher of St. Mary's loyally strive to develop each young girl attendant there into the truest, noblest, and most intelligent womanhood. Every advantage of equipment in the class rooms, laboratories and study rooms, every care in the matter of food and clothing, and exceptional excellence of climatic conditions—all these features are found at St. Mary's, in the perfection of development only to be obtained by the consecration of devoted lives to educational Christian work in a spot favored by the Lord.

THE NEWS,
By John W. Eastman.
PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.
$1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

The Crookston Daily Journal celebrated the first year of its existence last week by being enlarged. The Journal is without doubt the most progressive newspaper in the Red River Valley.

A Republican administration and a Republican congress can and will regulate trusts and combinations whenever they become oppressive or a menace to the public. A Democratic congress or administration never did control or regulate anything and probably never will. It never created anything except hard times and a deficit, and never destroyed anything except prosperity and a surplus in the treasury. The intelligent public is not deceived by the Democratic press in its efforts to blame Republicans for labor troubles or fix upon them the responsibility for obnoxious combination of capital, but the uninformed are often misled. There probably would be no combinations of capital under Democratic administration, for the reason that capital would not find investment, just as there would be no strikes for the reason that there would be so little employment that there would be nobody to strike.

Sheep in Northern Minnesota.

The owner of an undeveloped farm in northeastern Minnesota is confronted with the problem of how to utilize as much of the resources at his command as possible. The chief of these is the large expanse of wild brush pasture. Cattle will select the grass and peavines and will not browse on leaves to any extent except when pasture is scant. But sheep will eat nearly all kinds of brush as well as weeds, and will do fairly well on such feed, although for best results they should have some grass or other feed. The closer sheep are confined the more pronounced is the effect of their grazing upon the brush. Sheep will not kill brush which stands too high for them to reach, but when this is slashed down they will absolutely prevent its sprouting again. Sprouts around the base of stumps are kept down, wild growth as ferns, etc, killed out and in from two to 4 years' time depending on the closeness of the pasturing, such ground can be broken with almost as much ease as an old field. The roots will be found to have decayed very fast, and stumps especially hardwood, can be removed much sooner and cheaper where sheep have worked around them for two or three years, than is ordinarily the case. The labor of caring for sheep is light except during lambing, when the flock requires the closest attention. During the summer it amounts to almost nothing. The profits from sheep accrue from sale of wool and the increase of the flock, and from the fact that they not only utilize feed which would otherwise be utterly wasted, but in so doing, do a great amount of work towards clearing up the land which would otherwise have to be done by human labor. The drawbacks are cost of fencing, possible losses from dogs or wild animals, and, with inexperienced or careless persons, improper handling, especially in winter, resulting usually in the loss of the lambs. None of these objections are such as should deter any one from going into sheep raising if he is prepared to give them the attention necessary to success. Constant attention to the welfare of the sheep is as necessary as it is with any other class of live stock.

Destoryed the Dam.

A delegation of citizens from the head of Gull Lake called at the Tribune office Friday afternoon and said they had destroyed the dam at the foot of the lake for the reason that the water was so high that it flooded the roads and bridges around the head of the lake and also damaged the grass on the meadows, there being a foot of water over the same. The parties owning the logs had been previously notified both personally and by mail that unless the logs were run out of the lake the dam would be removed, and the deed was done.—Tenstrike Tribune.

A GOOD LAW

AND IT SHOULD BE ENFORCED THIS FALL.

As the season for the moving around of traction engines is close at hand, it will be well for the owners of threshing rigs to remember that the laws of Minnesota governing them are strict. according to their provisions the whistle shall not be blown while on any street or highway within 500 feet of any team passing thereon. Also such traction engine while moving along such highway must be stopped at least 100 feet before meeting any horses traveling thereon, and not be started again until such horse or team of horses has passed the engine.

A willful violation of the above provisions is punishable, upon conviction, by a fine of not exceeding $100 or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding 90 days. A disregard of the above law also renders the offender liable for all damages caused by such disregard. The owner of any traction engine who neglects to furnish plank to protect any bridge or culvert upon the highway when crossing the same with a traction engine will pay one-half the expense of repairing such bridge or culvert, provided that the cost does not exceed $50.

ABOUT SEWERS

A TOPIC OF INTEREST TO THIEF RIVER FALLS.

The city council held a meeting last Friday evening to receive the report of Day F. Stacy, regarding the proposed system of sewerage to be established in Thief River Falls. The city fathers were unanimously in favor of establishing the system and instructed Mr. Stacy to continue the work. About $5,000 will be expended this fall, and the city will issue certificates of indebtedness to pay for the work.

There is some opposition to the council doing this work, and it may not be improbable that an injunction will be served restraining them from proceeding. Others who favor seeing the work done believe it should be postponed until next spring or summer, when the price of labor is cheaper than during harvest time.

One thing, however, upon which all should agree, is the fact that a system of sewerage is badly needed, and it should be established as soon as practicable.

To the Editor:

The statement that property owners will have to pay $100 to make connections with the sewers is a gross misstatement. A trench 100 feet long, 12 feet deep at the sewer and 6 feet deep at the house end and 3 feet wide—which is plenty wide to lay a sewer pipe—contains 100 yards of dirt to be handled. 20 cents per yard is a fair price for the work, which amounts to $20. 100 feet of 4 inch sewer pipe—list price 20 cents per foot—makes the cost of pipe $20. A pipe layer one-half day amounts to $1.50, and a barrel of cement $2.50 makes the total cost of the work $44.00.

When two parties use the same drain, the cost is but one-half.

A New Food.

A Case Lake individual has conceived the idea of powdering suckers and pickerel of which millions can be taken from the lake yearly to be utilized as food. The new preparation will be known as "kreiker" and it is said there is plenty of of capital to be had to develope the new industry which bids fair to be a paying proposition.

AS USUAL

THIEF RIVER FALLS BASE BALL CLUB AGAIN DEFEATED.

The Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls base ball clubs played two games of ball Sunday, one at St. Hilaire the in forenoon and the other at Thief River Falls in the afternoon. As usual the local team lost both games, and the base ball fans are greatly discouraged.

The people here had felt sure that they would win these two games and had sent to Minneapolis for a catcher and pitcher from the league, securing two of the best players in the northwest—"Dad" Clark and Hunt. The boys went up against a strong aggregation, and games were lost wholly by errors made by the local men.

CRUEL JOKE

MEANEST PEOPLE IN THE WORLD LIVE AT ST. HILAIRE.

Word came from St. Hilaire Monday to the effect that "Dad" Clark, who was the pitcher for the base ball club here Sunday, had been arrested and placed in jail at St. Hilaire. This sad news cast a gloom over Thief River Falls base ball cranks—at that time not in the best of spirits—but it was finally decided to send W. C. Smiley, who had acted as chaperon for "Dad" during his brief sojourn here, to the rescue. Mr. Smiley went to that village of sin, which sails under a christian name, only to find it was a joke—practical one they called it.

A STEAMBOAT

THAT'S WHAT THE THIEF RIVER SETTLERS WANT.

O. J. Rollis, the hustling general merchant from the town of Rollis, was in the city last week. "The greatest need of the settlers up the Thief river just at present," said Mr. Rollis to the NEWS, "is better transportation facilities. Of course we will have a railroad before many years, but until that time comes we want some enterprising person to build a steamboat. It would be a good paying proposition, and all the settlers and store keepers up the river would patronize it liberally.

ROLLIS NEWS

FROM THE EASTERN MARSHALL COUNTY NEWS.

The Baumann family is moving to Rollis from Thief River Falls.

Harry and Dr. Whitcomb are making extensive improvements on their claims this season.

J. D. Abbott is drilling a flowing well on his place. A. J. Waller has the contract for doing the work.

The town of Rollis needs a blacksmith. A good man with money and spunk will make a fortune.

Herbert Forder is expected home soon from Virginia city where he has been working in a drug store for the past few months.

John Forder, formerly of this place was married in San Jose, Cal, July 1, to Miss Grace Eggleston. The groom is well known here and the bride is a wealthy California belle.

Some time ago, the postmasters of Thief River Falls, Breese. and Rollis petitioned the postal department at Washington for a triweekly mail route between Rollis and Breese. The mail route was granted, and bids for its establishment were sent in July 18th, and in a short time the people of Rollis will be receiving their mail three times a week, instead of twice, as under the present system. This will be a great improvement in our mail service, as at present the mail arrives on Mondays and Wednesdays, and from Wednesday till Monday the people must satisfy themselves without news from the outside world.

A very pleasant time was enjoyed Sunday when a multitude of people gathered at the residence of Hans Lovon at 1 o'clock and surprised Hans Lovon and Ole Lian by presenting them with money and merchandise for provisions they lost on a boat on Thief river some time ago. Something over $20 in cash and the same amount in merchandise was presented. Among those that contributed the most were O. J. Rollis of this place, and Mr. Langseth of Thief River Falls. A short speech was delivered on the pleasure of helping each other along in this world, and fine songs were rendered by the Sunday school and others. A good lunch was served by the ladies and all wore board smiles when the departed at 6 o'clock.

The second annual school meeting of school district No. 85, town of Rollis, was held at the school house last Saturday afternoon, and was enthusiastic, harmonious and attended. O. J. Rollis resigned his position as treasurer of the district and Miss Addie Williams was elected to fill his place. C. L. Macumber was elected director in place of J. D. Abbott, the latter's term having expired. The sum of $75 was voted for improvement and the school term was changed from six to eight months. All business at the meeting was transacted in a business-like manner, and Rollis will, in future, have better educational facilities than it ever had before.

HARVEST

COMMENCED THE FIRST OF THE WEEK.

The harvest of wheat in favored sections around here commenced the first of the week, but it will not be in full blast until next week. Taken as a whole the crops will not be up to the average around here, but they will be a great deal better than was anticipated this spring. On the ridges the yield will be the best it has been for years, but in the low lands a great deal of damage has been done by the heavy rains.

Regarding Homesteads.

Cruisers say that there are many homestead claims taken years ago by traveling men and city folk, which have been left in the state nature provider, and no attempt at establishing residence upon them has ever been made, says the Cass Lake Times. The homestead law requires that residence shall be established on the land taken on or before six months from the day of entry; if not the land may be contested and the homestead loses his right to the land. It is not the purpose of the law to protect the homesteader unless he complies with the requirements of the law nor is it the purpose of the law to exact conditions that cannot be performed, but there is no excuse for a claimant to neglect to build a house on his claim within the six months given him, and if he fails to do so, it is not only the right but the duty of every law abiding citizen to enter contest and have the tract restored to the category "open lands."

L. G. Browning, United States commissioner for the district of Minnesota, is prepared to give attention to homestead filings and take final proof.

France's new prison at Fresnes, some eight miles from Paris, is the largest in the world.

Andrew Carnegie intends to erect a monument to James G. Blaine at Pittsburg, probably in Schenley Park, near the Carnegie Institute.

A memorial of Rosa Bonheur, presented by Senor Gambart, the Spanish consul at Nice, has been unveiled at Fontainebleau, near which town she dwelt for many years. The memorial consists of a bronze bull, an enlarged fac-simile of one of her sculptures; the bas-reliefs of the pedestal give her portrait and representations of three of her principal paintings.

The women of the German city of Magdeburg will honor the memory of Queen Louise by the erection of a statue of the venerated queen. Johannes Goetz was intrusted with the task of creating in Carrara marble the figure of the beautiful queen. The figure stands on a massive cubical base, bearing on one side the inscription: "Louise, Queen of Prussia," and on the opposite side: "Dedicated by the women of Magdeburg."

State Geologist Dumble of Texas has disclosed sources of mineral wealth that are astounding. He says that in one county alone, that of Cherokee, there are 600,000,000 tons of rich iron ore in sight, and that in east Texas, as a whole, there are 3,000,000,000 tons. And by the side of this ore lies all the coal necessary to work the ore into shape. The geologist makes the flat statement that "no country in the world has cheaper material for smelting iron than east Texas."

In order to appreciate the extreme democracy of the people in the southeast of Europe, it may be mentioned that Mme. Karaveloff, wife of the prime minister of Bulgaria, continues to pursue her avocation as school teacher, and every morning when her husband leaves home to attend to his duties as premier she takes her departure for the public grammar school to fulfill her duties as one of the teachers. She is a very remarkable woman, and has been imprisoned and tried on charges of treason and of lese majeste while the political foes of her husband were in office.

Now that Rostand's play, "L'Aiglon," has aroused so much interest in the melancholy story of Napoleon's son, there will be some interest in the death of the last considerable actor in the abortive conspiracy to restore the empire with the Duke of Reichstadt in his father's place. This person was Varabowski, a Pole, who was a lieutenant in the grand army and fought at Waterloo. The conspirators in 1822 took possession of several towns in the west of France in the name of Napoleon II., but at Saumur the movement was stopped and the small force they had gathered rapidly scattered, Varabowski escaped and returned to Poland, where he has just died at Warsaw, at the age of 105 years.

The "brown-tailed" caterpillar has been officially considered by the Boston board of health, whose members are ready to acknowledge that this pest can produce the skin irritation complained of by some residents in the suburbs of that city. The insect is destructive of fruit trees. The hair of the worm is brittle and barbed, and its action on the skin is regarded as purely mechanical; rather than poisonous. It is yet to be determined whether actual contact with the worm is necessary to cause the irritation, or whether this may result through the blowing about of the hair or fur by the winds. The doctors incline to the latter belief. However produced, the irritation and resultant sickness are described as being severe.

King Carlos of Portugal has become passionately devoted to yacht racing, and has announced his decision to have a racing yacht built for the express purpose of enabling him to win back from the English Royal Yacht Squadron the Vasco de Gama Cup in the third international race, which takes place next year over a course extending from Southampton to Lisbon, that is across the dangerous Bay of Biscay. The king is now in consultation with naval architects with regard to the designs for his new racing yacht, and is disposed to have the latter built in the United States, rather than in England, the victories of the American defenders of the America Cup and the recent mishaps to the Shamrock inclining him to the belief that boats built on this side of the Atlantic unite a greater degree of strength, with lightness and delicacy of lines, than those of English construction and design.

It cannot be too often repeated that the secret of German success in so many branches of human activity is specialization. And it may fairly be asked whether in many cases they do not "pay too much for their whistle." The days are long gone by when Schiller could venture to condemn the exclusive pursuit of what he called "bread-and-butter" studies. Nowadays nearly every one in Germany keeps "bread and butter" steadily in view. The next generation of Germans will be even more specialized than their fathers.

TO CHECKMATE STRIKERS.

Unexpected Move Made by the National Tube Works.

Pittsburg, July 28. — The National Tube Works company at McKeesport has made an unexpected move intended to checkmate the Amalgamated association. Their skilled workmen have been asked to sign individual contracts to practically repudiate any union labor and they have been given but a short time to think the matter over. It is understood that should they not sign the contracts they will find their positions vacant, and the axe is expected to fall to-day.

It transpired yesterday that late on Thursday evening the 600 welders of the mills were paid off and then taken into the office of the general superintendent, where they were presented with individual contracts to be signed for at least a year. Some demurred, while others signed the contracts.

The movement of fighting fire with fire carried consternation into the ranks of the strikers. The welders are highly skilled workmen, and with their co-operation the big plant might be closed down. With them in line the plant will probably keep on running as though nothing had happened. It was intimated by friends of the welders that they would all sign the contract. Definite announcement that the officers of the American Sheet Steel company would start the W. Dewees wood mill in McKeesport as a union plant on Monday reached the headquarters of the Amalgamated association yesterday. The news was received in silence. That the move would not be permitted to be made without a decided attempt to check it, was shown by long and earnest conferences during the afternoon.

OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Detailed Figures Are Given for the Year Ended June 30, 1901.

Washington, July 28. — The detailed figures of the foreign commerce of the United States in the year ended June 30, 1901, were completed by the treasury bureau of statistics yesterday. They show total imports of $822,673,016; total exports, $1,487,765,557; exports of domestic products, $1,460,453,809.

The imports by great classes in the fiscal year 1901, compared with the previous year, are as follows:

Articles of food and animals,1900, $218,510,098; 1901, $222,227,898. Articles in crude condition for use in domestic industry, 1900, $302,426,748; 1901, $269,763,404. Articles wholly or partially manufactured for use in manufactures and mechanical arts, 1900, $88,433,549; 1901, $79,080,716. Articles manufactured ready for consumption, 1900, $128,900,597; 1901, $130,662,903. Articles of voluntary use, luxuries, etc., 1900, $111,070,094; 1901, $120,936,096. The reduction in value of imports occurred chiefly in raw silk, hides and skins, wool, and India rubber, and in most of these the reduced value is partially due to reduction of price rather than quantity.

FOSBURG IS FREE.

"Not Guilty," the Verdict of the Jury by Direction of the Court.

Preston, Minn., July 28. — The hot burg trial has ended. Robert Stewart Fosburg, accused of murdering his sister May, has been declared not guilty by a jury of twelve men, on an order from the court. The proceedings occupied just eight minutes from the convening of the court. Four minutes of that time was occupied by the court in telling the jury that the state had not sustained its case and in instructing them to return a verdict of not guilty. Two minutes afterward young Fosburg had been ordered to stand up and was formally discharged. Immediately there was a demonstration which was quickly quieted.

BREAKIN THE DROUTH.

General Rains Reported Throughout Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., July 28.—General rains throughout Kansas yesterday caused an effectual break in the drouth. The rains came too late to be of material benefit to the corn, but will result in plenty of stock water and giving new life to the pastures. The rain in Topeka lasted an hour. Among the towns reporting rains are Pittsburg, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Eureka, Osage City, Burlingame, Emporia, Parsons, Iola and Lyndon. These localities report precipitations from light showers up to heavy rains of two and a half inches fall. In many places rain is still falling and indications are for more rain.

Capital Gossip

BITS OF NEWS GATHERED AT ST. PAUL.

(Special Correspondence.)

Attorney General Douglas has arranged for the purchase of 250 acres of timber land on the east end of Lake Itasca for the state park. The purchase has been under consideration for a year. The purchase price is $2 an acre for the land and $5.65 per thousand for the timber. This makes the price of the land about $17,000. The land belongs to J. S. Pillsbury of Minneapolis.

Attorney General Douglas also began condemnation proceedings on about 160 acres of other land within the park boundaries, near the outlet of the lake. About two-thirds of the proposed park is now in the possession of the state and the other third is held by individuals.

The attorney general is trying to secure the construction of a lodge near the southern boundary of the park. The house of the superintendent is near the northern boundary and in an out-of-the-way place. Mr. Douglas wants a good sized lodge erected which will accommodate visitors. A force of men is at work in the park clearing out the brush and straightening out the roads for the increased travel.

Among the many things which the state board of control must do Aug. 1, when it comes in charge of the various state institutions, is to fix the price of sermons. The law says that the board must equalize salaries; that men performing like work in different institutions must receive the same remuneration! The price paid for sermons varies perhaps more than anything else. In most of the institutions local pastors are paid $5 for each sermon they are invited to deliver before the inmates. This is at the rate of $260 per year.

But at the state prison sermons are valued higher. Two gentlemen of the cloth are engaged, one a Catholic and one a Protestant. Each receives a salary of $600 per year, and they preach alternate Sundays. This makes prison sermons cost nearly $23 each. After Aug. 1 prison sermons will be much reduced in price.

On Aug. 1, when the board of control takes charge, the entire system of bookkeeping for the institutions of Minnesota will go under a radical change. The board will have in its office duplicates of all the books kept at the asylums and schools, journals, ledgers, statistical records containing data in regard to every prisoner, pupil and patient and timebooks of the employes. The board is planning regular and thorough inspection of all the institutions. The board is empowered to appoint a woman inspector if the case requires, or hire a man inspector to inspect in person.

One of the important changes will be in the purchase of supplies. The institutions will make an estimate of supplies needed for three months. The board will pass on the list, and the various articles from all the institutions will be provided and bids will be advertised for. The board is thus able to buy in very large quantities and save money. The superintendents will be notified where to send for supplies as he needs them. The bill is sent to the institution and checked with regard to quantity, then to the board and then to the auditor for payment.

Kenneth Clark, R. C. Saunders, F. B. Kellogg and M. V. Seymour, representing the bondsmen of Former State Treasurer Bobleter, held a conference with Attorney General Douglas to secure action to compromise the claim of the state against Col. Bobleter and his bondsmen.

Under chapter 212 of the Laws of 1899, upon the application of the attorney general the governor is empowered to appoint a board of two supreme court judges and the attorney general, which has power to compromise the claims of the state in such cases. No action has been taken. The amount due to the state is $45,031.06. The bondsmen fought the payment through the supreme court and were beaten in a decision last June.

The failure of the Farmers and Merchants' American Exchange and the state banks in which were state deposits are the cause of the present proposed compromise. The state had $2,500,000 deposited in banks throughout the state during the panic years of 1893 and 1894.

The last legislature passed an act expressly providing that the state treasurer shall not be liable for money deposited in regularly selected banks.

OPIATES KILL THREE.

A Trio of Deaths Caused in St. Paul by Poison.

St. Paul, July 26.—Poisons caused the death of three men in St. Paul in one day. Dr. J. W. Ray, a dentist at Seventh and Jackson streets, died in his office from an overdose of morphine, to the use of which he had been addicted for several years. He had suffered from the heat and had taken an unusually large amount which caused his death. W. G. Allen's death was caused by a dose of the same drug. Mr. Allen had been a sufferer from cancer and took the poison to end the pain. His home was at 892 Selby avenue. Emil Daniels died from an overdose of opium. He was employed by the St. Paul Lake Ice company.

Stillwater, Minn., July 25. — The Younger brothers have signed contracts for employment. They have contracted for one year as traveling agents to sell monuments for the P. N. Peterson Granite works, St. Paul. They are to be given $60 a month with traveling expenses, boarding and lodging. The contract says that they shall not attend county fairs or public meetings in their business capacity, nor are they to use their notoriety in any manner whatever for advertising purposes.

LIGHTNING'S MANY VICTIMS.

A Man's Long Series of Afflictions Culminates in His Wife's Death.

Milwaukee, July 27. — A Sentinel special from Antigo, Wis., says: During a terrific cloudburst here lightning struck and instantly killed Mrs. Martin Cherek, who was calling on a neighbor. Her baby was severely burned and may die. Another woman in the same house was severely burned. Martin Cherik has suffered a series of afflictions. Three years ago the tornado here destroyed his house. Last winter his dwelling was destroyed by fire, and now the loss of his wife in an instant follows. The members of the family of Milton Bacon were shocked by lightning which entered their house, but were not seriously hurt. It is reported that the mill of the Northern Woodland company in the town of Peck was damaged by wind and the boarding house destroyed. Monroe, Wis., reports lightning struck in twenty places and four inches of rain fell. Janesville also reports a severe storm.

TROUBLE FOR SOMEBODY.

Authorities Want to Know About Pekin Relics Advertised for Sale.

Washington, July 27.—Information has reached the department of justice that there are displayed in a store window in Minneapolis, Minn., a number of articles bearing a card to the effect that they were taken at the sacking of Pekin and that they are for sale. The department of justice has asked the co-operation of the treasury department in ascertaining the history of these articles, by whom brought into the country and whether rightfully in his possession, and incidentally whether the customs duties on them have been paid. Special agents of the treasury department have been instructed accordingly.

DRY IN DAKOTA.

Farm Hand and Several Horses Die of Heat.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 27. — The first death in this immediate locality as the result of the intense heat occurred here late yesterday afternoon, the victim being Gilbert Helgeland, a young man aged about twenty-five, who was in the employ of Ole Hoeland, a farmer living near East Sioux Falls. Reports of horses dropping dead in the harvest fields are quite numerous. So dry is vegetation throughout the state that a farmer living near Howard burned up twenty-five acres of wheat through carelessly knocking the ashes out of his pipe while in the field.

TIMBER LAND FRAUDS.

Commissioner Hermann Takes Vigorous Measures.

Washington, July 27. — On account of timber land frauds discovered in Montana and Idaho Commissioner Hermann of the general land office has suspended all proofs made during the present year under the timber and stone act pending the conclusion of the full investigation and inquiry begun some time ago. This action applies to all stations where government timber land is purchased and involves thousands of cases. Many of the large companies and speculators who, it is alleged, have had "dummies" as agents, make purchases of these lands from the government, as in Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

STARTED BY SUN'S RAYS.

Fire Starts in a Show Window and Destroys a Store.

Sioux City, Iowa, July 27. — Yesterday afternoon J. F. Phelan & Co.'s dry goods store was totally destroyed by fire, supposed to have been started by the sun's rays in the front show windows. The fire started so quickly that many of the clerks had narrow escapes making their way from the building through the dense smoke. Two persons were slightly injured by jumping from a second story window. The total loss was almost $80,000; nearly covered by insurance.

G. N. TRAIN ROBBERS.

Seen Near Fort Benton Going South.

Great Falls, Mont., July 27. — A Fort Benton dispatch to the Great Falls Tribune says: "Three men answering the description of the Wagner train robbers, stopped five hours at Benton stage station on Sunday, July 14, and left at 4 a. m. going south. They had pack horse and three saddle horses. All were very tired and said they had been looking for a location along the Missouri river. They took their turns sleeping and watching and one, looking like half breed, was sick."

Barn Destroyed by Lightning.

Caledonia, Minn., July 27. — The protracted drouth and heated spell was broken yesterday afternoon by a severe electric storm and a heavy rain. A barn belonging to Peter Schmitt, two miles north of town, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. It was lately filled with thirty tons of hay.

SCIENCE

THE BABY'S FIRST SUMMER.

Fortunate is the city baby who is born in September or October, for then he will have but one summer to pass through while his powers of resistance are very low. By the end of the second year the child should have developed considerable strength of constitution, and ought, if properly cared for, to triumph over many evil influences to which the younger infant is very apt to succumb.

The primary cause of infant mortality in cities during midsummer is the intense heat, and next comes, in the case of bottle-fed children, the giving of indigestible food or of milk which has begun to change. The baby's life, in other words, depends upon his being kept cool and being properly fed.

These matters are of such importance that in most of our cities the health boards issue each summer leaflets containing directions for the care of the baby, and distribute them among all the tenement-house dwellers.

In these leaflets, mothers are warned particularly to keep the baby and all its surroundings absolutely clean. The child should be sponged or bathed once or twice every day in lukewarm water, dried by wrapping in a soft towel, and then put into clean, dry clothes. The clothing should be light and loose and changed often. The baby should never sleep in the clothes which it has worn during the day, nor wear in the day those which have been slept in at night. It should sleep in a separate cot; and never in the bed with its mother. The sleeping-room should always be well aired, the windows being open day and night.

During the day the baby should be kept in the open air as much as possible, and a daily ride into the country on a trolley-car, or an excursion on the water, if there is any large body of it accessible, will do more, perhaps, than anything else to keep the little one in health.

It should never be forgotten that a baby needs water to drink, and plenty of it, in hot weather. The water should be boiled, then poured into a bottle, half filling it, and well shaken to restore the air lost in boiling. This is then cooled, not iced, and given to the baby in small quantities at frequent intervals through the day.

A nursing baby has an immense advantage over one that is bottle-fed, and on no account should weaning be attempted just before or during the hot weather. If artificial feeding is necessary, the physician should be consulted as to the choice of a food, for among the many kinds on the market some are good and some are not.

A baby's diet will be considered more fully in another article on the prevention of summer complaint.

AN ELECTRIC STORM DETECTOR.

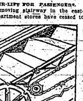
By connecting a form of electric coherer, invented by Professor Lera, which is capable of registering electric discharges taken place in the atmosphere at a distance of several miles, with a telephone receiver, Mr. Tommasina, an Italian experimenter, has produced an instrument, named "electro-radiophone," which enables an observer to follow the course of a storm so far away that no trace of it appears above the horizon. When the receiver is held at the ear, the listener hears the sounds of the storm as if it were raging in his immediate neighborhood. In one instance an approaching storm was thus detected 12 hours before it passed over Intra, the place of observation.

FILTERED WATER BAMBOO.

Mr. R. H. Yapp, an English naturalist who has recently explored the mountain ranges of the Malay Peninsula, reports the hitherto little known fact that in several species of bamboo the hollow internodes—the parts of the stems between the joints—are stored with large quantities of naturally filtered water. The knowledge of this fact might be of great service in an emergency. Mr. Yapp also discovered two species of ferns, growing on trees, whose thick, fleshy stems are filled with galleries tunneled by ants, the ferns thus forming living nests for ants.

STAIR-LIFT FOR PASSENGERS.

The moving stairway in the eastern department stores have ceased to be a wonder to the shoppers and have proved themselves a great convenience and necessity, being always ready to carry passengers without the necessity of waiting for a return trip as in the case of the ordinary elevator. Now comes an inventor of Philadelphia with an improvement on the original moving stairway, with its low treads, the new arrangement taking the form of stairs which are made to rise on the endless chain conveyor. These stairs afford a firm foothold on which the passengers can stand until they reach the upper level. A glance at the picture will show the plan on which the apparatus works, the treads forming automatically at the bottom of the lift by causing the supporting bars to pass into alternate upper and lower slots or guideways, thus bending the conveyor out of a straight line to form the treads and risers. Of course, the moving handrail is also provided to aid the passengers in maintaining their balance.



FROGS' NESTS.

In Brazil a species of tree-frog (Hyla faber) constructs in the water a curious nest, or fortification, to protect its eggs and its young from the attacks of fish. Starting at the bottom of a pond, the mother frog erects a circular, tubelike wall of mud, which at the top projects above the surface of the water, where it bears some resemblance to the crater of a miniature volcano. In the water thus enclosed the eggs are laid, and when they have hatched out the young frogs are secure from enemies until they are able to take care of themselves. In the meantime the parents remain in the neighborhood as if on guard.

PERUVIAN SEA PONIES.

Among curiosities of human invention are the small, gondola-shaped floats called caballitos, "little-horses," employed by fishermen on the coast of Peru. They are made of sticks of cane, firmly bound together, with a high, turned-up prow. The rider rests on his knees and guides his water pony with a paddle. He rides over the roughest waves, and penetrates the roughest waves, and penetrates the surf and breakers without fear. Occasionally he is dismounted, but immediately regains his seat. His little raft is unsinkable and defies the stormiest sea, although of course he never goes far from land.

DUST FROM THE CLOUDS.

Baron Nordenskjold, upon finding on the snows of Greenland dust composed of the elements invariably associated with meteorites, and of uncommon occurrence in terrestrial matter, concluded that cosmic dust is falling imperceptibly but continually upon the earth. Recent spectroscopic examination of many varieties of dust collected in England and elsewhere has an interesting bearing on Nordenskjold's conclusions. Among the constituents of dust floating in the air are lead, silver, copper, rubidium, gallium, indium, thallium, nickel, manganese and so forth. Many of these can be traced to their sources in factory chimneys and flues. Volcanic dust has characteristic features, and dust from clouds, collected either by itself or in hail, snow, sleet or rain, exhibits a regularity of composition not seen in other varieties of dust. Iron, nickel, calcium, copper, potassium, and sodium always appear in it in about the same proportions. Some dust that fell near Dublin in 1897 resembles meteorites in its composition, is attracted by a magnet and seems to be of cosmic origin.

A GIANT VARIABLE STAR.

In the constellation Gemini is a well-known variable star, Zeta, of less than the third magnitude when brightest, which, according to an estimate recently set forth in the Observatory by Miss Agnes M. Clerke, may be ranked among the giants of starry space. The comparative insignificance of Zeta Geminorum among the visible stars appears to be due to its enormous distance. If removed equally far away, our sun would be only one thirty-seventh as bright as Zeta Geminorum when at its maximum brightness, and Miss Clarke computes the gravitative power of the star at 225 times that of the sun.

SCIENTIFIC NOTES.

Sugar Cane of China.

The sugar cane of China is said by botanists to be an entirely distinct species from that of India, and this fact is supposed to indicate that the development of sugar cane was carried on independently by two different nations at the same time.

Telescopes Above the Clouds.

Another mountain observatory is projected. It is to stand at an elevation of 6,000 feet near Semmering, in the Austrian Alps. The neighboring valleys are frequently filled with clouds, while the chosen peak towers clear in the starlight.

Electrical Power.

In a paper read recently before the Societe Internationale des Electriciens M. Picou, who was the engineer-in-chief for the electricity supply service at the Paris exposition, gave some interesting figures. The total duration of the electricity service at the fair was 2,756 hours, during which public lighting was supplied for 909 hours, and the average number of hours of running of the generators was 713.5. The total connections to the mains represented 11,266 kilowatts—practically 20,000 horse power.

"Wind shakes" are circular cracks in a tree separating the different layers. They are supposed to be caused by wind, and greatly injure the lumber made from such a tree.

SIGNALS TO MARS.

PROFESSOR OF ASTRONOMY SAYS IT CAN'T BE DONE.

If Lake Superior Was Covered with Petroleum and the Oil Set on Fire It Would Take a Good Telescope to See the Light.

Sir Robert S. Ball, the Cambridge astronomer, writes to the London Express: It was the remark of the great Sir William Herschel that the resemblance of Mars to this earth is one of the most striking features in the solar system. The observations of the planet which have been made since the time of this incomparable observer have tended to illustrate the truth which he then laid down. Mars is not so large as our earth, of course, but, like our earth, Mars is surrounded by an atmosphere. At the poles of Mars are vast white tracts which become greatly extended during winter on the planet, but which shrink again during the ensuing summer. To deny that these white tracts on Mars consist of ice or snow now seems to me a supposition so fantastic that I think we need not seriously discuss it. It has been proved by recent observations that the large dark objects on Mars long believed to be open oceans can no longer be so described. By the excellent telescopes now available, these dark tracts have been shown to be traversed by marks of a nature so permanent as to be wholly incompatible with the supposition that in looking at the dark regions we are looking at sheets of liquid. For the demonstration of this point we are indebted to the labors of many astronomers, but we must specially mention Mr. Percival Lowell, who has devoted consummate skill and assiduity to the study of this planet. With the help of a powerful telescope at his observatory in Flagstaff, Arizona, Mr. Lowell has also largely extended our knowledge of the canals discovered many years ago by Schiaparelli. Mr. Lowell has given us some excellent reasons for his belief that these so-called canals do indeed mark the courses along which water is conducted from the melting snows at the poles of Mars to the more arid parts of the planet. When, upon certain occasions, which do not recur very frequently, Mars comes nearest the earth, the distance of the planet from our globe is still about thirty-five million miles. Now what can a telescope show at the distance of thirty-five million miles? It requires a very good telescope to reduce the apparent distance of an object to a thousandth part. That is to say, it is a very good telescope which will show an object as clearly as we could see it with the unaided eye if it were at a thousandth part of its distance, and if we dispensed with the assistance of a telescope. It is, therefore, impossible to hope for any signalling to Mars unless the signals were on a scale sufficiently great to be visible to the unaided eye even at a distance as great as thirty-five thousand miles. This consideration suffices to prove the utter futility of human endeavor to make any demonstrations on a sufficiently large scale to be perceptible to the inhabitants of Mars. The very largest city that this earth has ever known would be altogether too small to be visible to a being dwelling on the planet Mars, even if that being were endeavoring to see it with a telescope as powerful as the greatest and most perfect instrument in any observatory on this globe. If the whole extent of Lake Superior was covered with petroleum, and if that petroleum was set on fire, then I think we may admit that an inhabitant of Mars who was furnished with a telescope as good as that which Mr. Percival Lowell uses at Flagstaff might be able to see that something had happened. But we must not suppose that the mighty conflagration would appear to the Martian as a very conspicuous object. It would rather be a very small feature, but still I think it would not be beyond the reach of a practiced observer in that planet. On the other hand, if an area the size of Lake Superior on Mars was to be flooded with petroleum and that petroleum was to be kindled, we should expect to witness the event from here not as a great and striking conflagration, but as a tiny little point of just discernible light. The disc of Mars is not a large object, and the conflagration would not extend over the three-hundredth part of that disc. It is sufficient to state these facts to show that the possibility of signalling to Mars is entirely beyond the power of human resources.

Wood Pavements Radiate Heat.

Tests made in Boston prove that pavements radiate more heat than any other kind. The time of the experiments was the early afternoon, with the thermometer at 98 in the shade. The average temperature was 124½ for the wood pavement, 115 for granite blocks, 113 for asphalt and 102½ for macadam.

IN CARDLAND.

Gambling in England Some Two Hundred Years Ago.

After the advent of the House of Hanover, the favorite games at court were "quadrille," an improvement of "ombre," and "commerce." The gains and losses of the kings and queens were as a rule restricted to 100 guineas, but on twelfth night it was customary for thousands to change hands. On one occasion Lady Cowper, a lady in waiting, refused, for the sake of her children, to take part in the game, as none sat down to the table with less than £200. About the year 1740, a rage for "whisk," or whist, set in, but at first it was considered too wise a game for ladies to join in. Hume, the historian, and even the great Johnson regretted that he had not learned to play cards. In 1742, "Horry" Walpole finds it absolutely necessary to learn "whisk," "having waited in vain for its being left off." We find him in another letter threatening to build an altar to "Pam" to commemorate the escape of his charming Duchess of Grafton, who, it appears, had been playing cards in Rome, when she ought to have been at a cardinal's reception, where the floor fell in and all the monsignors were precipitated into the cellar! Cards were so very much in evidence in his time that even invitations were frequently issued and notes written upon the backs of playing cards, which on that account were usually plain without any design. The chevalier's famous order to retreat at Culloden was written on the back of the nine of hearts.

A fresh attempt was made in 1739 to remedy the state of gambling in England, by passing an act which provided that "any person keeping a house or other place to game in forfeits £200, half to the prosecutor and half to the poor of the parish." Whereupon two ladies of title, Mordington and Cassells, who kept open houses for gambling, claimed their privilege of peerage in order to intimidate the peace officers from doing their duty and suppressing the public gaming houses kept by them.—Longman's Magazine.

THREE AMUSING GAMES.

Read About Them and See How Much Fun They Are.

The game called water sprite affords children a lot of fun. Players stand in two lines facing each other, with a large open space, representing a river, between. The child called the water sprite stands between and beckons one to cross. This one signals to one on the opposite side, and they run across to exchange places. If touched by the water sprite, the water sprite and the one touched exchange places, and the game is continued. Last pair pass is another amusing game. The children stand in twos, one behind the other. One who is catcher stands in front with his back to the others and calls, "Last couple out!" when the last two in the line run around to the front and try to join the hands before they are touched by the catcher. The one touched becomes catcher, and they take their places as first couple in the line. To play red lion, one player, the red lion, stands in a den. The others venture near to him, calling:

Red lion, red lion, come out of your den;
Whoever you catch will be one of your men.

He runs out and tries to catch one. The first one caught joins hands with him, and together they try to catch the others, each captive being added to his line. Only the two persons at the ends of the line can catch the others.

The Religious Dance, Seville.

Seville is the one place in the world where dancing is a part of religion. The dancing of the Seizes before the high altar, as I saw it at the feast of the Immaculate Conception, to me, was not simply a curious thing, but a thing perfectly dignified, perfectly religious, without a suspicion of levity or indecorum. This consecration of the dance, this turning a possible vice into a means of devotion, this bringing of the people's art, the people's passion, into the church, finding it a place there, is precisely one of those acts of divine worldly wisdom which the Catholic church has often practiced in her conquest of the world. And it is a quite logical development of that very elaborate pantomine, using the word in all seriousness, which the ceremonies of the church really are, since all have their symbolical meaning, which they express by their gestures. Already we find in them every art but one: poetry, (the very substance of the liturgy), oratory, music, both of voices and of instruments, sculpture, painting, all the decorative art, costume, perfume, every art lending its service; and now at last dancing finds its natural place there, in the one city of the world where its presence is most perfectly in keeping.—Spectator.

Don't Be Morbid—It Is Catching.

A morbid state of mind, if long continued, produces a like condition of body. One should shun a morbid state of mind as much as one does smallpox or any other contagious disease. The People's Health Journal, says: "Figuratively speaking, morbidity is a highly contagious disease, and a whole household may become infected by one morbid-minded individual. Such conditions of mind, which are often cultivated, do far more harm than epidemics of smallpox or yellow fever. While these diseases destroy lives and homes of many people, the other, destroying mind and heart, affects the multitude."

BEES OF HUMOR

HE WAS ACCOMMODATED.

From the London Tit-Bits—He was a dudish little man, but he had a loud voice, and evidently wanted everyone to know what he said. He and a companion, who, be it said to his credit, seemed ashamed of the company he was in, stood in the hotel rotunda last Saturday night. The little fellow was talking about Ireland, and he said many hard things about the country and the people. A great big man stood near by listening to the little fellow's vaporings. He merely smiled until the little fellow said in a very loud tone: "Show me an Irishman and I'll show you a coward."

Then the big fellow slipped up and, touching the little fellow on the shoulder, said in a heavy, bass voice: "What's that you said?"

"I said show me an Irishman, and I'll show you a coward," said the little fellow, whose knees were shaking under him.

"Well, I'm an Irishman," said the big fellow.

"You are an Irishman? Well," and a smile of joy flitted over the little fellow's countenance as he saw a hole through which he could crawl, "I'm a coward."

MOTHER GOOSE REPARTEE.

From the New York Evening Sun—The Little Boy had been trying to go into vaudeville, with ill success, and he was obviously in a fault-finding humor as he sat under the haycock with Bo Peep.

"I fail to see the reason why you secure such widespread advertisement," he exclaimed, pettishly.

"Especially," retorted Bo Peep, when you are so vigorously blowing your own horn!"

"You neglect your charges shamefully. I believe even now they are lost," he pursued.

"Oh, they'll all come home, like your press agents, bringing their tales behind them," returned Bo Peep, airily.

Hereupon the Little Boy looked rather sheepish for an instant. "Your long-continued association with crooks is corrupting your morals and manners," he cried, recovering himself.

At this Bo Peep blushed, but made no reply. Perhaps, after all, it was jealousy that made the Little Boy Blue.

LOCATING THE ROBBERS.

From the St. Louis Star—They tell this story on James H. Cronin, speaker of the house of delegates: "The other night Mrs. James H. Cronin was awakened by some noise, and, after listening for a time, became convinced some one was in the Cronin home who had no right to be there. Then the lady proceeded to rouse James. It took her some time, as that gentleman was plunged into slumber fathoms deep so greatly fatigued through holding up the appropriation bill was he.

"But finally the shaking and the voice of his better half aroused the speaker, and sleepily he asked: 'What's the matter?'

"'There's a robber in the house, Jim!' exclaimed the wife, excitedly.

"And then James rolled over, and as he settled to sleep again he also settled the question before the house by saying in a half snore:

"'You're wrong. There's no robbers in the house. All the robbers are in the council.'"

NEXT BEST THING.

From the Ohio State Journal—Miss Millicent Darlington, who, when Mr. Smithers proposed, had told him that she was to wed Mr. Coldcash, was moved to pity as Mr. Smithers stood, irresolute, with his hat in his hand.

"I hope you will come and see us some time," she said, for she didn't know what else to say.

"But you will be married and will have born to you a beautiful daughter," answered Smithers, with much emotion; "then I will come and engage as your coachman, and, if fortune is with me, elope with your daughter."

Then Smithers walked slowly out the yard and toward a monastery.

THRILLING.

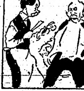
The Ladies—An' then?

Chimmie—Me mother called me in.

HIS STOCK DROPPED.

P. B. V. in Short Stories—Some years ago a well-known Philadelphia broker found himself with a large quantity of cotton on his hands and the market rapidly going to pieces. Ruin was staring him in the face, and he was, not unnaturally, feeling very much depressed. After the closing of the exchange one afternoon he was returning to his office in the company of a friend, who was doing his best to cheer him up, when he was accosted by a young acquaintance of his, one of those "cheerful idiots" who never under any circumstances happen to say the right thing. This youth slapped our friend familiarly on the back, crying: "Well, old chap, how about cotton?" The unfortunate broker gazed at him for a moment with an expression of deep disgust, and then replied, slowly: "Young man, I never did like you much, even when cotton was high."

RISKY.



Customer—What! Never shave yourself? How's that?

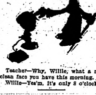
Barber—I'm so nervous I'm afraid to.

A DOG WHO DIDN'T GOLF.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer—The first contest of the crack players of a newly opened golf field out West was sadly interrupted by the obstinate conduct of a mean bull terrier. He took possession of the second hole, and defied dislodgment. As he is a robust terrier, with a full set of large and well preserved teeth, it was deemed unwise to attempt to dislodge him by force. Diplomacy was substituted, but it didn't work. He resisted all the usual terms of endearment, as well as the promises of tender steaks and seductive bones. In addition to guarding the hole, he took possession of a ball that happened to roll near him, and which he worried from time to time with low guttural remarks.

At last accounts the dog was still holding the fort, and the discouraged golfers were debating whether they had better engage a skilled marksman to shoot the brute or at once take measures to lay out a new golf field.

GIVE HIM TIME.



Teacher—Why, Willie, what a nice clean face you have this morning.

Willie—Yes'm. It's only 8 o'clock.

HIS MEMORY FAILED.

From the Albany Journal—"I say, Dan," said one of Dan Weyrich's customers the other morning, "how many doors have you got in this place?"

"Three—the front door, the back door and the side door. Why?"

"You've got more than that."

"No, I haven't."

"Well, look around and see for yourself."

"Well, I see only three," said Dan, insistently. "How many do you see?"

"I see four—the front door, the back door, the side door and the cuspidor."

* * *

Next day I went in to see the fireman and was asked:

"How many doors have I got?"

"Three are all I can see," I replied.

"No, you're wrong. I've got four."

"Where are they?" I asked.

"Why, I've got a front door, a side door, a back door, but Dan being entitled to three guesses had forgotten the fashionable name and the cigars were on him.

LITTLE LAUGHS.

Slow.

"We call our little branch railway the 'G. O. P.'"

"What's that for?"

"Get out and push."

Those Printers.

"Well, that's the worst yet."

"What's the matter?"

"My magazine poem entitled 'Baffled' appears under the head 'Raffled.'"

Springs of Mis-Conduct.

"You haven't any manners, Jack; why didn't you offer to escort that young woman home?"

"Oh, I have manners all right; but I didn't have street car fare."

Safer on His Back.

Pinching-bug—Say, what makes you wear your fur overcoat in such hot weather?

Caterpillar—Oh, half the moth balls we get now are no good.

Farmers Fight Over Laborer.

Kansas City papers contain an account of three farmers being arrested there while fighting over the possession of an idle man; whom each wanted for a farm hand.

CROPS ALL RIGHT

ALL DOUBTS AS TO EXISTING CONDITIONS OF GRAIN CROPS SET AT REST.

CORN FAILURE OFFSET BY WHEAT

Telegraphic Reports From Three Hundred Points in the Corn and Wheat-Producing States of the Great West Dispel Rumors of Disasters—Wheat Grades Higher Than Expected.

Chicago, July 30.—All doubts as to the existing condition of the great Western grain crops on which the general prosperity of the entire country during the coming year will largely depend are set at rest by the following telegraphic reports from the largest producing states.

Each correspondent at 300 points in the corn and wheat belts was instructed to ignore all reports or rumors of disasters in other districts, but to send an accurate estimate of the percentage of a full crop of corn and wheat likely to be harvested in his own immediate district.

As to corn, the most important single crop in the country, the results are summarized below. Table showing indicated average percentage of corn yield in 300 districts of the eight principal corn-producing states, based on accurate reports of special correspondents:

States—	Average percentage of full crops (indicated)	Last year's crops (bushels)	This year's crop (indicated)
Illinois	50	264,176,220	132,033,113
Iowa	62	305,859,048	189,396,107
Kansas	30	133,870,630	40,161,189
Minnesota	65	31,794,705	20,666,560
Missouri	30	180,710,404	54,213,121
Nebraska	48	210,430,064	101,006,430
North Dakota	48	331,184,000	160,097,000
South Dakota	71	32,418,819	23,017,361

Corn crop last year, 2,105,102,516 bushels.

Value of last year's corn crop, $751,220,034.

Average price of corn per bushel at the farm last year, 35 cents.

Indicated average yield, based on reports from eight principal producing states, 49 per cent of maximum crop.

Crop will not much exceed 1,200,000,000 bushels.

This indicates a corn crop for the coming year—although conditions may be slightly improved if hard rains come in the next fortnight—of a little more than 1,200,000,000 bushels. Last year's crop was a bumper—2,105,102,576 bushels, worth to the farmer an average of 35.7 cents a bushel, or $751,220,034—a stupendous sum to divide among American farmers.

A loss of 900,000,000 bushels—burned up by this year's unprecedented hot wave and drouth—would mean a loss of over $350,000,000 to the farmers at last year's prices. But corn was selling at 13 cents a bushel higher yesterday than on the same day last year, so that a crop of 1,200,000,000 bushels would be worth at this year's prices $156,000,000 more than last. The actual loss to the farmers at the worst will be $200,000,000.

The reports show that this loss will be partly offset by a wheat crop ever larger and richer than any one has estimated. It will far exceed last year's crop of 583,229,506 bushels, worth $322,515,177, an average of 62 cents a bushel. All the reports indicate that this year's wheat, wherever threshed, grades higher than expected. As Western farmers have carried over a vast quantity of corn from last year's crop, and this year's wheat crop will partly compensate them both in quantity and value for the shortage in corn, the dispatches clearly indicate that 1901 will not be known as a year of crop failures, although of corn this will be the poorest crop in eleven years.

The drouth is broken. From nearly every part of the sun-scorched territory reports came last night of heavy rains and cooler weather.

Philadelphia, July 30.—The battleship Maine, designed to be bigger, stronger and faster than her namesake whose shapeless mass still lies in the harbor of Havana, was successfully launched from the yards of the William Cramp Shipbuilding company Saturday. Ball Games Postponed.

Chicago-Boston game postponed on account of rain (American).

Cincinnati-Chicago game postponed on account of rain.

Various Amateur Games.

Stillwater, Special, July 28.—Two serious accidents marred the ball game played here this afternoon by the Joseph Wolf company team and Ellsworth, Wis., which resulted in a victory for the Stillwater team, 14 to 9. Chase of St. Paul, catching for Ellsworth, had his right thumb fractured, and Pitcher Kilroy was unintentionally bumped into by Haggerty and was severely injured in the side. The battery for the home team was Powers, Clark and Johnson.

Fargo, N. D., Special, July 28.—As a result of the agitation by a minister the members of the Fargo ball team were arrested this afternoon while playing a game with Larimore. The deputy sheriffs arrived at the beginning of the eighth inning, when the score was four to two in Fargo's favor.

GREAT DROUTH BROKEN.

General Visitation of Showers in the Corn Belt.

Washington, July 30.—Yesterday's weather bureau advices from the great corn belt were the most encouraging that have come to hand for the past forty days, showing, in the opinion of the forecasters, that the great drouth has been broken by a general visitation of showers in many portions of that section, and with a prospect of their continuation to-day. Coincident with the fall of rain have come reduced temperatures. With few exceptions the temperatures reported were not abnormally high, no maximums of 100 degrees being reported. West of the Mississippi river they were generally in the neighborhood of 90 degrees. The forecasters, while not making any specific predictions as to the effect of the rain on the crops, express the opinion of those crops which have not been irreparably ruined will be benefitted by the breaking of the drouth. The late crops naturally will be helped the most. The reports show that during the past twenty-four hours showers were quite general in the corn belt and were heavy over much of the state of Iowa and over the part of the corn belt not visited by rains, including Western Nebraska, Southern Missouri and Oklahoma. To-day there will be showers throughout the corn belt region except in its extreme western portion and Southern Indiana and Southern Ohio, and they will continue generally on Tuesday in the Ohio and Middle Mississippi valleys. There have also been showers and thunderstorms in the northern tier of states from New England to the Dakotas, in Northern New Mexico, North Arizona and Southern Utah and on the west gulf coast.

INDIANS TAKE A HAND.

Demand Homesteads Under an Old Law.

Oklahoma City, Okla., July 30.—Keo Tuck, a Sac Indian, has given notice at the land office at El Reno of his intention to file upon land adjoining the townsite of Lawton, which has been the principal town in the Kiowa and Comanche reservation. This is probably the most valuable tract of the entire reservation to be opened. The application is made under a section of United States land laws passed in 1887, which gives every homeless Indian the right to go to any part of the public domain and to make entry for any tract of land that is not in possession of a homesteader. The section has never been repealed, and the right of the Indians who have no allotments or who were omitted from the tribal rolls, is one that they can exercise at any time, so it is stated. With Keo Tuck were sixty members of the Sac and Fox tribe who propose to enter filings, and attorneys throughout the country are said to be searching for other Indians who have not secured possession of homestead tracts. It is believed there are 500 in the two tribes who can secure choice claims in advance of ones who have registered by simply making their filings. The plan is to select lands they desire and then go into court and ask for a restraining order to prevent the registers and receivers from accepting filings on the tracts selected. This will, if successful, give the Indians time to perfect their title to the best quarter-sections of land in the new country.

BATTLE WITH KIDNAPPERS.

Boy Is Rescued by His Father After a Running Fight.

Williamsport, Pa., July 30.—A bold attempt at kidnapping was made last night at the village of Mantoursville, four miles south of here. James, the thirteen-year-old son of William Ebner, hotelkeeper, was the victim. The boy had gone to a woodshed for kindling, and on his return was seized by four men, who had been loafing about his father's hotel all evening. One of them stuffed a wad of cotton into the lad's mouth while running toward a strip of woods that led to the river. James succeeded in getting the gag out of his mouth before they had gone very far and shouted for help. Ebner heard the boy, and, grabbing a rifle from back of the bar, he started in pursuit. Then followed a running fight in the dark. Finally the father heard the boy shout that he was free, and a moment later father and son were reunited. The kidnappers escaped by swimming the river.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY

UNHAPPY LOVE AFFAIR ENDS IN THE SUICIDE OF A MAN AND WOMAN.

BOTH DRANK CARBOLIC ACID

Lovers Quarrel, and The Woman Takes Carbolic Acid and Dies in Great Agony—The Man in His Grief Over His Loss Also Drinks Carbolic Acid and Then Leaps Over an Embankment.

Milwaukee, July 28.—A lovers' quarrel ended tragically yesterday in the death by suicide of Emmet Russell of St. Paul and Laura McTaggert of Fergus Falls, Minn., an inmate of a resort on River street.

The two had for years been lovers. Early Thursday morning they were together in Miss McTaggert's room and quarreled over some trifling affair. While engaged in the altercation and her lover's back was turned, the girl, without any warning of her intention, seized a bottle of carbolic acid, and with the jesting remark, "Here's ho!" drank the contents. She became unconscious almost immediately and died about an hour later in great agony. Russell appeared to be greatly affected by the girl's death and for several hours afterward moped about mourning his loss. At 9 o'clock yesterday morning he left the house, saying that he was going for a walk on the lake shore. A few hours later he, too, swallowed carbolic acid and leaped over an embankment. When discovered life was extinct. A letter was found on his person showing that the suicide had been premeditated, and asking that his body be buried beside that of Miss McTaggert.

HOOP IS AFTER DOWIE.

"John the Baptist the Second" Issues a Challenge.

Chicago, July 28.—John Hoop of St. Cloud, Minn., who says he is a reincarnation of John the Baptist, has challenged John Alexander Dowie, as "Elijah the Second," to a joint debate. The conditions are that Dowie must prove he comes honestly by his title of Elijah or leave the city in disgrace. Hoop has already spent a week in Chicago trying to convince the followers of Dowie that their leader is an imposter, but has met with small success. So far from being discouraged he now regards the challenge he has just issued as one which Dowie cannot refuse without losing caste among his supporters, and being forced ultimately to resign his position as the head of Zion.

DAMAGE VERY SMALL.

Not to Exceed One or Two Per Cent in Fargo Section.

Fargo, N. D., July 28.—Nice showers fell yesterday afternoon and last night following two cool days, and it is thought that the damages by the hot weather earlier in the week have been mitigated. Some farmers feared considerable injury to the crops, but in the valley proper it will not exceed over 1 or 2 per cent. The effects may be noticeable in the few top kernels. In the lighter soils in the western and southern part of the state there was more damage than here.

TREASURER'S BOOKS ALTERED.

Erasures and Forgeries Made in Attempt to Cover Tax Frauds.

St. Paul, July 28.—Erasures and forgeries have been discovered in the books of the county treasury. They were committed, presumably, for the purpose of making the Bourne frauds in the auditor's office less liable to detection, but their extent is not yet known, and it may be that they will involve many thousands of dollars. Expert Frank X. Mossbrugger discovered the frauds while engaged in securing evidence to be used against Walter Bourne.

A majority of the students at Berea college, Kentucky, are mountain girls, who until their arrival there had little or no opportunity to learn modern culinary methods. Education in this branch is being carefully imparted, under the supervision of an expert graduate of Pratt institute, Brooklyn.

NEW RAILROAD IN [illegible]

Material of All Kinds Being Shipped on Rush Orders from This Country.

Shipments of cars, locomotives, rails and steel for railroad bridges to Ecuador have commenced in enormous quantities. The heavy orders are from the South American railroad, which is being built across the Andes from the port of Guayaquil to Quito, the capital, about 300 miles. As more than a hundred miles of this road into a new land has now been put in active operation and 40 miles additional soon is to be opened, the railroad has placed rush orders with American manufacturers for large amounts of steel rails, bridges and cars.

The Carnegie plant has begun a shipment of 40,000 tons of steel rails. Two 65-ton locomotives, equipped with drivers for mountain grade have also been started.

The American Bridge company is under contract to rush 20,000 tons of steel bridge material. A certain car company has begun shipments on a contract for 300 flat, box and stock cars, and a Wilmington firm is building passenger coaches, parlor cars and a director's car for the same road.

Coach Goes to Mount Vernon.

Through the efforts of Mrs. E. B. A. Rathbone, vice regent for the state of Michigan of the Mount Vernon Ladies' association, the historic old state coach used by George Washington when he rode to New York city to take the oath of office as first president of the United States will be preserved for future generations among the other relics at Mount Vernon on the Potomac. This information was announced by Augustus Frey, who has owned the coach for several years, and recently came to the conclusion that it would look better at Mount Vernon than it has stored in his barn. It is understood that Mr. Frey gave the coach to the association.

The coach, once rich with decorations and embroidered upholstery, has lost much of its elegance and is now but a shadow of the suggestion of the elegance of the period. For years it was used by Gen. and Mrs. Washington about Mount Vernon.

Express Cars on Street Railways.

It was announced the other night that the New York Electric Vehicle and Transportation company has acquired control of the Metropolitan Express company, formed in Albany a few weeks ago, and that a system of baggage and parcel exchange will be opened in connection with the Metropolitan Street Railway company. At the time the Metropolitan Express company was formed Frank H. Platt appeared as an incorporator of the company, and all sorts of rumors were afloat as to the object of the company. It now develops that under his direction a contract was made with the Metropolitan Street railway, by which it would carry express cars over all its lines, except on Broadway. The cars will connect with the lines of the Union Railway company, running to Mount Vernon, New Rochelle and other points.

Gives Brain Room to Grow.

One of the rarest operations known to modern surgery was performed the other day upon Isidor Levine, the 13-year-old son of Adolph Levine, of New York city. It is known as Lannelongue's operation, and consists in cutting away a part of the skull to give the brain room for development. Little Isidor Levine had been deranged all his life. His parents lived in Nashville, Tenn., but came to New York two years ago in the hope that physicians there could help their son.

No treatment ever benefited him. Dr. Gottlieb made a careful study of the case and came to the conclusion that the boy's brain was normal, but that it was being cramped by a deformed skull. He found that the skull was smaller on the left side than on the right, and located the trouble on that side of the brain. An operation was necessary.

Baldwin Tests Balloons.

Evelyn B. Baldwin, the arctic explorer, made a balloon ascension from Quincy, Ill., with his cousin, Samuel Baldwin. They ascended to a height of about two miles and landed safely near Hulls, 20 miles south of Quincy. The explorer went on from Hulls to St. Louis, and then out to Kansas to say good-by to his parents. He sailed from New York for Norway to join the expedition. The Baldwin brothers, of Quincy, have made 30 balloons for the arctic explorer, which he will use in the far north for scientific observations in the upper atmosphere. He came to Quincy to get the balloons, and as he had never been up in one before, Sam Baldwin took him up to teach him how to regulate the great gas bag.

Tree Freshman on Flagstaff.

Howard Blakeslee, of Detroit, the freshman class president, was caught at three o'clock the other morning near the top of the 150-foot flag pole that came to Ann Arbor college from the world's fair, attempting to affix his class flag to the highest point on the campus. Warden Armbruser noticed a dark object on the pole, and yelled for it to come down. Superintendent of Grounds Reeves and a boiler-room contingent were attracted to the spot, and as the unknown refused to come down, they sat in a circle at the foot of the pole smoking cigars and pipes.

At last Bakeslee became exhausted, and slowly slid to the ground, where he was identified. The halyards of the pole had been cut and a big freshman flag was confiscated.

Satisfactorily Explained.

He was waiting on the street corner, and as she got off the street car he lifted his hat and stiffly saluted:

"'Deevenin, Miss Wharton!"

"'Deevenin, Mistah Carr!" she replied, with her nose in the air.

"Miss Wharton," he continued as he swallowed at the lump in his throat, "when yo'r sister dun tole me yo' was at de candy pull wid dat low down pusson named Jackson I couldn't skasely believe it."

And a cuckoo clock in the nearest house struck the hour of 7 in joyful exultation, and all was love and peace.—Washington Post.

Bismarck as a Lover.

From "The Love Letters of Bismarck," just published by Harpers, this extract from a letter to his wife is taken:

"I married you in order to love you in God and according to the need of my heart and in order to have in the midst of the strange world a place for my heart, which all the world's bleak winds cannot chill and where I may find the warmth of the home fire to which I eagerly betake myself when it is stormy and cold without, but not to have a society woman for others, and I shall cherish and nurse your little fireplace, put wood on it and blow and protect it against all that is evil and strange, for next to God's mercy there is nothing which is dearer and more necessary to me than your love and the homelike hearth that stands between us everywhere, even in a strange land, when we are together."

Flats.

Tess—Mr. Sophtie seems to be very attentive to you. I suppose congratulations will soon be in order.

Jess—They're in order now.

Tess—Really?

Jess—Yes. I rejected him last night.—Philadelphia Press.

In a joint session lasting three hours the Porto Rican assembly unanimously passed the free trade resolution. The assembly hall was crowded with spectators and cheers greeted the announcement that Governor Allen had signed the resolution.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A Famous Game of Ball.

In 1763, on the 4th of June, loyal British subjects everywhere were celebrating King George's birthday. Over here in America at Fort Michilmackinac, overlooking the beautiful strait of Mackinac, the English soldiers were invited by the Ojibwas and the Sacs to watch a game of ball they were to play that afternoon. The Indian game was the same that is now known as lacrosse in Canada. Glad to celebrate the holiday in some way, many of the officers and soldiers readily accepted the invitation, and not more than half of them remained at the fort.

It seems a little strange that the soldiers should have responded so promptly to the invitation, for they knew that the Indians were very hostile to the English. Their sympathies were with the French, who had originally occupied the fort, and they were influenced, too, by the Canadians, who regarded the English as rivals in the fur trade.

The game took place on the plain in front of the fort. In the crowd that gathered to watch it were many soldiers without arms, many blanketed squaws, many Canadians and a number of Indian chiefs and warriors. There were two goal posts at opposite ends of the plain, and each side tried to defend its goal and drive the ball.

All at once the ball was thrown high into the air and fell very near the pickets of the fort. Then in a moment the Indians changed from interested ball players into the fiercest of warriors. Apparently in pursuit of the ball, they rushed toward the gate and, before the English could realize what was happening, had entered the fort.

The blanketed squaws had been concealing hatchets and muskets all this time, and these they handed to the Indians as they ran after the ball. Some of the Indians fell upon those who had gathered outside; others attacked those on the inside. A massacre such as the Indian alone is capable of followed, and thus by a clever ruse the important military post at Mackinac passed from the possession of the English into the hands of the Indians.
